Truman Warns of Coming Sacrifices; Allies Close Dangerous Breach in Line

Taegu Peril Is Lessened; U. N. Planes Back in Air

Reds Applying New Pressure in North But Allies Term Situation Improved

TOKYO, (Sunday) Sept. 10 (AP)—The Korean Communists today applied new pressure on the northern front where American and South Korean forces yesterday closed a 5-mile gap opened by Red tanks.

Despite the pressure, the northern front defending the strategic base of Taegu was described as "relatively quiet" by Associated Press Correspondent Leif Erickson at United States Eighth Army headquarters.

Some of the Red heat on Taegu was cooled by the closing of the breach in the line between Yongchon and Kyongju northeast of Taegu.

Air Action Heavy

But the Reds still were a continuing threat to the South Korean provisional capital from the north. Powerful forces there have been hammering incessantly at American ridge positions seven miles above Taegu.

The Allied air force—grounded for two days by rain—swarmed back to the battlefront at dawn today with only a medium overcast to hinder the harassment of Red troops and supply lines.

The United States Fifth Air Force said bad weather limited sorties to 200 yesterday—only 187 in close support of ground troops. The Reds took advantage of every respite in the aerial assault to move men and supplies to their deeply bled divisions.

Erickson also reported a Sunday morning quiet over the southern front, with the Reds still holding Battle Mountain—won again Saturday at heavy cost. The bitterly contested height dominates the approaches to Masan. Masan is the gateway to the all-important supply port of Pusan, 27 air miles east of Masan.

Communiques Skipped

The general quiet that had fallen over the entire Korean battleground since Saturday's blazing actions on the north and south was reflected in the absence of headquarters summaries. Both General MacArthur's and Eighth Army headquarters skipped their Saturday night and Sunday morning announcements.

The gap in the United Nations northern defense wall was snapped shut by South Korean troops driving east from Yongchon and

5 'Task Forces' Delving Into Defense Costs

Senate Investigators To Scan Dealings With Foreign Cartels

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Five Senate "task forces" start this week on broad investigations into the American defense effort which will have ramifications in every part of the Nation and far parts of the globe.

One, it was disclosed yesterday, will probe into the effect foreign cartels have on the quantity we can get and price we must pay for scarce material required for the rearmament program, and what can be done about it where the monopolies are controlled by our allies.

They are being undertaken by the Senate Preparedness subcommittee—a new Congressional "watchdog" of our military program patterned closely after the old Truman War Investigating Committee.

As set up with a "no politics", "no headline-hunting" procedure, the investigations promise to become a major element in the Nation's rearming plan.

Disclosed by Senator Johnson

Here is the ambitious interrogation program of the Preparedness subcommittee of the Senate Armed Services Committee as disclosed yesterday by its chairman, Senator Lyndon D. Johnson (D., Tex.):

1. A probe into how the recent tripling of the price of natural rubber and other price advances of foreign-produced strategic and critical materials may affect our efforts to rearm ourselves and our allies. "Can ECA be made a two-way street to help remedy the situation?" they ask.

2. A careful survey as to whether we have enough steel capacity in the United States for probable future armament programs, plus domestic use, and if not, what must we do to meet it?

3. An on-the-spot probe of our Alaska defenses — recently described by General Eisenhower and others as perhaps our weak-

Battle-Bound GIs to Train For 14 Weeks

Clark Answers 'Green Troop' Critics; Marine Period Is 12 Weeks

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Army training has been boiled down to wartime essentials, Gen. Mark W. Clark said yesterday, and added that no soldier is being sent into battle without 14 weeks of such training.

The Marine Corps announced at the same time that Marines sent to Korea must have 12 weeks of training and that combat veterans are given a four-week refresher course before going overseas.

These statements were in response to published criticisms of both fighting services. Charges have been made that inadequately trained soldiers and Marines were being sent into combat in Korea.

General Clark, chief of Army Field Forces, described the soldier's 14 weeks of training as "the most arduous individual training in the United States." He emphasized that every recruit is given six weeks of basic training, followed by eight weeks of specialization in the arm in which he will serve.

Ten months ago, Clark said, he began speeding the tempo of training and increasing its toughness. As a result, he declared, every soldier in every branch of the service, will be able to fight as an infantryman and to take care of himself in battle. Nor did he leave any doubt about the toughness of this new program.

"Great emphasis," he declared, "has been and will continue to be placed on preparing (the soldier) psychologically and physically to endure the hardships of the most brutal kind of warfare and to meet and overcome a savage and ruthless enemy who violates every recognized rule of international law."

The training period has been shortened and the quality of training improved, Clark said, by eliminating nonessentials, increasing emphasis on useful knowledge and

Non-Fathers Face Draft In January

300,000 Childless Husbands, Bachelors With Dependents Due To Lose Exemptions

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

Draft-age married men who have not become fathers can expect a Selective Service call for pre-induction examinations in November and induction into the armed forces in January.

Under Presidential decree, all married men or single men with dependents have been thus far exempt from military service under the Selective Service Act of 1948.

However, with the Army's increasing demands for citizen-soldiers and the rapidly decreasing reservoir of single men in the draft ages of 19 through 25, manpower experts are already drawing up plans for drafting non-fathers.

May Act After Adjournment

The manpower experts believe that soon after Congress adjourns, the President will amend the Selective Service regulations for the calling up of some 300,000 draft-age men who are married and childless, or who are single but have been exempted due to having collateral dependents.

It is believed that 500,000 draft-age fathers will continue to be exempted until the end of the year, or until Congress decides what to do about World War II veterans of draft age.

Since the outbreak of the Korean war, the Army has called for 170,000 draftees. The Army's December call is expected to be around 100,000.

2,500,000 in Class 1-A

Under present laws and regulations, the Nation has a poll of 2,500,000 men in Class 1-A, single men available to serve in uniform. Thousands of 1-As are being deferred because they are attending school; others because theey work in war-essential occupations. Sixty per cent of what's left in this pool is being rejected by the Army for failure to pass tests.

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of the Selective Service System, has asserted some 2,000,000 draftees will be required to raise and maintain an armed forces level of 3,000,000, as proposed by President Truman.

The 2,000,000 draftees can be obtained from the 19 through 25 age group, military manpower experts believe, if the exemption is lifted from 800,000 men who are married or have dependents, and from 2,500,000 veterans of World War II.

Two other methods are under consideration for increasing the number of men fit for inductions. One way would be to lower the Army's present high standards of mental and physical examinations. The other way would be to extend the draft age from 26 through 35.

Truman Puts Approval on Troop Aid

Help for Europe Made Contingent On Allied Increase In Own Armies

President Truman yesterday announced his approval of a Joint Chiefs of Staff, State and Defense Department recommendation to make "substantial increases" in the strength of American armed forces in western Europe.

In a formal statement, Mr. Truman made it clear, however, that the proposed enlargement of United States troop strength in Europe was contingent on matching action by the other North Atlantic Treaty members.

They must enlarge their own armed forces—obviously much more than they had planned even under previously announced expansion programs—the President implied.

Confirms Post Story

That is "a basic element" in the carrying out of the American promise, he indicated.

In issuing his statement, the Chief Executive confirmed a Washington Post story that an Administration decision had been firmed up to enlarge our defense forces on the other side of the Atlantic. The report, published yesterday morning, said that the plan was to station 5 to 10 more American divisions there as soon as they were brought into being, several months from now.

The Washington Post story also declared that an agreed-upon recommendation to offer an American military man of highest caliber—the names of Generals Eisenhower, Bradley and or Marshall are mentioned—as Chief of Staff to a consolidated military force in Europe.

No Word at Numbers

After a period of a year or so of heading up integrated military planning for the North Atlantic partners, that officer would probably succeed to the role of high commander of the combined forces, it was planned.

The Washington Post story indicated that there was growing Administration agreement to recommend also the creation of German military forces, up to the divisional level, for incorporation in the combined NATO armed force.

In his statement President Truman did not allude to these latter points, nor indicate—beyond the word "substantial"—the number of additional American soldiers to be stationed abroad.

But Secretary of State Acheson is nevertheless expected to broach all these ideas at his conferences beginning Tuesday in New York with the British and French Foreign Ministers, Bevin and Schuman, and then with the foreign policy chiefs of the rest of the North Atlantic partner nations.

Before he leaves, he will have

Highlights of Truman Speech

These are some of the main points in President Truman's home-front mobilization program, as announced in his speech last night:

The Goals:

A doubling of the Nation's defense efforts, from the present rate of 15 billion dollars of defense spending to 30 billions by next June, "probably . . . much more" than that in the following years to come."

The materials and equipment needed for this must be produced; the money to pay for it must be raised; inflation must be prevented.

The Necessary Measures:

"Heavier taxes for everybody," including a "just and fair excess profits tax," to provide a pay-as-we-go defense financing system.

Putting to work more women and older people.

Enlarging productive capacity, particularly for steel, copper and aluminum.

No mandatory price and wage ceilings "at the present time," but the imposition of such ceilings "vigorously and promptly when the situation calls for them."

The President's Advice:

To Consumers: "Buy only what you really need and cannot do without."

To Businessmen: "Do not pile up inventories; hold your prices down."

To Labor: "Do not ask for wage increases beyond what is needed to meet the rise in the cost of living."

To Everyone: "We should save as much as we can out of current income . . . We must be prepared to accept some reduction in our standards of living."

Proposed New Legislation:

Rent controls.

Possibly the amendment of the law that requires wages to be fixed for producers of each commodity whose prices are fixed.

Maryland Primary Races In Full Swing

Lane-Mahoney Clash, Tydings Bid Provide Campaign Fireworks

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Maryland politics now has something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue.

But don't listen for wedding bells. The noise for the next week will be the rumble of political guns rolling the voters to primaries a week from Monday.

So you're looking for something old: Just watch the old-fashioned name-calling contest between Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., and George P. Mahoney, the Baltimore paving contractor ousted as chairman of the Maryland Racing Commission. The winner—Lane is regarded as having the edge—will go up in the November election against Theodore R. McKeldin, 49, former mayor of Baltimore and two-time loser in the race for Governor.

Or something new: There are lots of new faces. Some will be seen but briefly. More about them later.

Something borrowed: Four opponents of Senator Millard E. Tydings, Democrat, have borrowed their key issue from Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wisc.)—that Tydings whitewashed the McCarthy charges of subversion in Government. Tydings called the subversion charges a hoax and the whitewash charge ridiculous.

And something blue: Think of how the losers will feel.

For Tydings to lose next week would be the State's biggest primary upset.

His primary opponents are John A. Meyer, 51, former member of Congress from Baltimore, and Hugh J. Monaghan, 2d, a 31-year-old lawyer who was an office boy in Tydings' campaign headquarters in 1938 when the Senator weathered a purge attempt by the late President Roosevelt. Both have hit at Tydings on the McCarthy

$150 Million Budget May Be Asked by D. C.

Nearly All Department Requests for Fiscal 1952 Now Turned In

By Sam Zagoria
Post Reporter

Budget requests of District government department heads, now almost all in, are expected to total about 150 million dollars for the fiscal year 1952, it was learned last night.

This figure would set a record high, topping the fiscal '49 peak of $143,886,908.

All of the departmental requests arrived at the Budget Office by the weekend, except that of the Metropolitan Police Department, but they have not yet been added up officially, budget officers said. The office is expected to release them to the public within the next two weeks.

The budget estimates have been pouring into the office of Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler for the past month and a few have dribbled in during the past week, although August 15 was set as the official deadline for the estimates.

By and large, it appears that department heads are asking for more than they did last year, when the total requests added up to $138,984,400.

One primary reason for this is the absence of any warning by the budget officer or the Commissioners to keep expenses down. The situation is similar to that in fiscal '49 when there were no restrictions and Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young's plan for expansion of city facilities had been issued.

In recent years, department heads have usually been warned during preparation of budget requests to hold up on personnel or facility expansions. The absence of this, in the past, has been interpreted as a green light for asking.

The assumption of a 150-million-dollar total budget request for operations in the period from July 1, 1951, to June 30, 1952, will give the

Nation Told To Expect Less Luxury, More Taxes

Stabilization Agency Created; Symington To Be Coordinator; Asks Profits Levy

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

President Truman warned the Nation last night to prepare for a lower standard of living, higher taxes for everyone, longer hours of work and a temporary setting aside of the Fair Deal goal of a "better life" for everyone.

The defense program goals—building up "the military strength needed to support the rule of law in the world," providing the materials and money for it, and preventing inflation while we do it—can be met, Mr. Truman promised.

No Wage-Price Curbs Now

But to do it, "All of us . . . must give up some of the things we would ordinarily expect to have for ourselves and our families," the Chief Executive declared in a Nation-wide radio and television broadcast.

At the same time, he revealed his plans for carrying out the broad new authority granted to him in the Defense Production Act of 1950.

As was expected, he explained that there was no intention "at this time" to impose wage and price controls. But he assured the Nation he would apply them with vigor the moment the situation demanded it.

Orders Records Kept

But, by way of preparation, Mr. Truman issued an executive order requiring every businessman, big or little (excepting only professional men, publishers, radio and motion picture enterprises and public utilities) to keep their price and cost records for the period May 24-June 24, 1950.

This is the base period to be considered for determining wage-price relationships and ratios when and if price and wage ceilings are set in the future.

In a second executive order, Mr. Truman provided for the creation of a new Economic Stabilization Agency. It is to study the complicated wage-price situation, to effect what voluntary action it can to prevent inflation, and to undertake actual wage and price fixing when necessary.

The agency will be headed by an administrator, as yet not chosen. Under him will be a price administrator to run what may become another OPA and a wage stabiliza-

Four Candidates To Compete for N. Y. Mayor Post

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (U.P.)—New York political leaders chose candidates today for a four-cornered race for mayor of the Nation's largest city.

Republicans backed State Labor Commissioner Edward Corsi and the Democrats chose State Supreme Court Justice Ferdinand Pecora.

Acting Mayor Vincent Impellitteri broke with the Democrats to run as an independent, and the American Labor Party chose Paul Ross, aide of former Mayors Fiorello LaGuardia and William O'Dwyer.

Corsi and Pecora were nominated at the party conventions tonight. Corsi won by acclamation, but a small demonstration in favor of Impellitteri broke up the otherwise routine nomination of Pecora.

Trapped 2 Days in 720-Ft. Pit

Last of 116 Known Survivors Of Scottish Mine Cave-In Safe

NEW CUMNOCK, Scotland, (Sunday) Sept. 10 (AP).—The last of the known survivors of the New Cumnock mine disaster were brought to the surface early today.

Officials at the pithead said 116 men had been rescued after being trappd nealy two days at the bottom of a 720-foot pit by a cave-in.

The rescued men, dirty, tired and worn, wore grotesque gas masks and respirators to crawl through a barrier of poisonous coal gas before making their way to the top of the Knockshinnoch Castle mine.

As the men came up there was confusion over the exact number of miners still unaccounted for of the 128 believed caught in the mine at the time of the collapse.

National Coal Board headquarters issued a recapitulation showing 13 were unaccounted for at 1 a. m. (8 p. m. Friday EST). The board said 87 had been brought to the surface and 28 were on their way up making a total of 115 rescued.

If officials at the pithead were correct in saying 116 had been brought up, the number still below would be 12.

Coal Board officials and leaders of the rescue parties conferred on the methods to use in attempting to locate the still-missing men. Rescue workers took time out for a rest and to replenish their equipment before starting on another underground search.

In all, 102 men, including one rescue worker, received hospital treatment.

Sent Up for Payroll Kickback

Parnell Thomas Gets Parole, Arranges to Pay $10,000 Fine

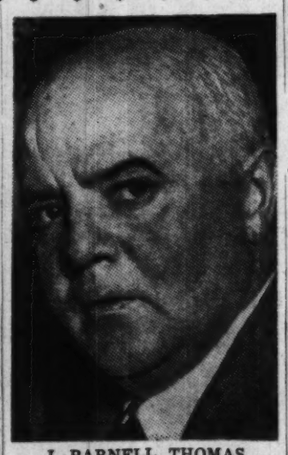
DANBURY, Conn., Sept. 9 (NYHT). Former Representative J. Parnell Thomas, confined in Federal prison here for nine months and two days, was granted a parole today after he made "arrangements" with Federal authorities to pay the $10,000 fine which President Truman had refused to cancel.

The 55-year-old former Congressman, who pleaded no defense in December, 1949, to a Federal payroll-padding charge, could have been released from Danbury last June 6—had he paid the fine—when he first became eligible for parole from his 18-month sentence.

Associate Warden J. B. Lattimer said that the "inmate will be paroled Sunday morning because there is a lot of red tape that has to be gotten out of the way before he leaves." Warden Lattimer described Thomas as an "excellent worker" in the prison's poultry department, where he had tended the flock of chickens kept inside the prison walls.

In Washington, Dr. George C. Killinger, chairman of the Federal Parole Board, granted the release of Thomas, a member of the House of Representatives from the Seventh New Jersey Congressional District from 1937 to 1949, after the fine payment was cleared up.

Dr. Killinger would not explain what arrangements had been made to pay the fine, but it was satisfactory to Federal authorities that the fine would be taken care of.



J. PARNELL THOMAS
. . . free after 9 months

Thomas pleaded no defense to a felony charge of taking $8000 in cash from salary kickbacks from employes in his Washington office who did no work for him and who turned over either all or part of their wages to him.

Finance Committee Choice

Naming of Gamblers' Lawyer By Democrats Starts Trouble

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The Democratic National Committee has just made itself a peck of political trouble by naming to its finance committee a St. Louis attorney who represents some of the country's biggest gambling figures.

The man is Morris A. Shenker. He has appeared here before the Senate Crime Investigating Committee and before the Senate Commerce Committee with St. Louis "betting commissioner" James J. Carroll, with William P. Brown, chief owner of the Pioneer race news wire, with Brown's partner, William Molasky, who contributed $2000 to Missouri's Gov. Forrest Smith's 1948 campaign, and he has been on hand several other times as an interested spectator.

Only yesterday, the Associated Press reported he was in Jefferson City, the Missouri capital, representing four St. Louis men indicted along with Western Union officials for conspiracy to violate gambling laws in New Jersey by accepting telegraphed horse race bets. Shenker lost his effort to prevent their extradition.

The appointment was announced Friday in a routine handout from Democratic headquarters here, calling Shenker "a well known St. Louis attorney" long active in party politics in Missouri. He is a

Draft Test Flunking Decried by Hershey

This Fiscal Year

U. S. Building Over 10,000 War Planes

NYHT News Service

Military aircraft production in th United States during the present fiscal year "will exceed 10,000 planes by a considerable margin," Adm. Dewitt Clinton Ramsey (retired), president of the Aircraft Industries Association, predicted yesterday.

He added this output would be "four or five times" that was planned before the Korean war but the cost would be only three times original estimates because of inherent economies in quantity production.

Writing in the September issue of "The Martin Star," house organ of the Glenn L. Martin Aircraft Co. of Baltimore, Ramsey warned this prediction of savings was contingent on the cost of "tools, material and labor" remaining at approximately their present level. He said "a slight drop in wholesale commodity prices," reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics August 18, gave some hope of such cost stabilization.

"It does not now appear that mobilization on the World War II scale is necessary or desirable," Ramsey said. "Our work force will be about doubled, to over 5000 employes, possibly by next summer. Construction of new plants or reopening of standby facilities probably will not required."

The head of the Nation's Selective Service System yesterday declared too many men were slipping through the draft net by flunking out on the intelligence tests—some intentionally.

Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey told the National Conference on Mobilization of Education that continuation of this rejection rate in the 10-to-25-year-old range would inevitably force calling up of less useful older men.

Before a group of fellow teachers Hershey expressed grave concern over a 60 percent rejection rate on 22- and 23-year-olds.

He went into the whole problem of rejections and indicated his agency was being blamed for the high rate, although the responsibility did not belong there.

'Sweep Them Up'

"We just sweep them up to the services. It's up to them, then, to take them or reject them."

In his talk to the 160 representatives of 77 national organizations attending the two-day conference at the Statler Hotel, the former teacher focussed his criticism on the Army intelligence test.

"Some college boys can't pass the test that a fifth or sixth grader can."

"It's a question of motivation. The present mental test depends on motivation. If there is indifference or neutrality or a fee'ing of 'What's the hurry?' then there will be rejections."

In World War II, rejections for physical and mental reasons ran 35,000 per 100,000, General Hershey said.

Rate Increases

In the current calls from among 24- and 25-year-olds, the rate has increased to about 60,000 per 100,000. Hershey explained that he was not heavily concerned about this because most of those summoned were sorted through and rejected in the World War II draft.

But when the report came in that the same rejection rate was holding up on the younger draftees, General Hershey said he began to wonder whether the mental test failures were because the draftees "couldn't or wouldn't pass them."

Hershey warned that the inevitable result of continuing such a high rate would be an expansion of age groups into levels where dependency problems were more numerous, skills more difficult to replace, physical condition less perfect and where large segments were veterans who had already done their bit.

Another view he expressed was that long-range planning be undertaken for "such crises" instead of each new one catching the Nation by surprise.

This attitude fits in with other talks given yesterday at the conference on how the million-man teaching profession could best serve in the present crisis.

Robert L. Clark, director of the Manpower Office, National Security Resources Board, declared firmly:

"There is no way out of the international situation for at least a generation. It is possible we may go through a decade or more as a garrison state; or we may move into a serious war.

"Even if we were successful in such a war, we might find ourselves faced with a world on the edge of chaos. We and all the other freedom-loving nations of the world need all the courage we can muster to face this crisis," he explained.

"Twilight" Mobilization

In meeting the current problem of "twilight" mobilization—not all-out warfare—Earl D. Johnson, Assistant Secretaary of the Army, said the Army plans "to make maximum use of the educational facilities of today.

"The more we can parcel out to the civilian population, the easier the job will be. We are counting heavily on using your institutions," he told the conference delegates.

The importance of the educational institutions and their products was underlined by Major General K. P. McNaughton, Director of Training for the Air Force.

"Too often we attempt to measure military air power in terms of numbers of groups, numbers of aircraft, airframe tons or other impressive tangible figures.

If the present crisis develops into a full-fledged war, the need for manpower will result in more women, the physically disabled and older workers being put "back into harness," Federal Security Administrator Oscar R. Ewing said.

Sec. Johnson Is on Way Out, Says Adviser to President

By Ernest B. Vaccaro
Associated Press Staff Writer

A close adviser to President Truman said yesterday that Louis Johnson is on his way out as Secretary of Defense.

This Administration confidant, who declined to be quoted by name, said that Johnson may step out before the general election in November.

This report lacked any official confirmation from the White House or Defense Department. In fact the current feeling in Congress is that the President is still sticking by his Defense Secretary.

Johnson has been the target of a swelling flood of criticism from Congress and other sources. This reached the bitterest pitch last weekend when Representative Tauriello (D., N. Y.), in a second demand for Johnson to quit, said he understood Johnson helped force the late Defense Secretary James Forrestal out of office.

And only Friday the Marine Corps League adopted a resolution calling for Johnson's removal.

Mr. Truman has vigorously defended Johnson on more than one occasion. However, some White House aides said the Presidet has been increasingly concerned over persisting reports of differences between Johnson and Secretary of State Acheson.

One daily confidant said that, while Mr. Truman will defend to the limit an appointee from outside attack, he is concerned because of published reports of Defense Department criticism of the Secretary of State.

"Of this you may be sure," one White Houe aide said, "the President feels that Secretary of State Acheson has borne up in this case with supreme dignity and will remain in the Cabinet after Johnson has gone."

Mr. Truman told a news conference August 3 that both Johnson and Acheson would stay as long as he is President.

Since that time, however, more than one White House official has reported, the President now feels that way only about Acheson.

Doctor-Dentist Draft Bill Signed; 8000 Affected

President Truman yesterday signed the doctor-dentist draft bill, permitting the calling up of medican men through the age of 50 for 21 months' service with the armed forces.

Few doctors are expected to be drafted. Main object of the bill is to get some 8000 to 10,000 doctors and dentists, trained at Government expense in the last war but who served little or no time in uniform, to "volunteer" for duty. Medical volunteers get a $100-a-month bonus on top of their service pay.

Meanwhile, the Department of Defense yesterday announced that 38 Army reservists and 1429 Navy reservists, who got their medical training at Government expense in World War II but who did not have to serve in the armed forces during the war, will be called up to active duty.

District Draft Boards Plan 59 Inductions Wednesday

Fifty-nine men between the ages of 24 and 25 have been ordered by District draft boards to report next Wednesday for induction into the Army.

The group will be the second District Selective Service contingent. Forty-eight Washingtonians were inducted last week.

The first Fairfax County draft induction is scheduled for September 28, when 21 men will be sworn into the armed forces at Arlington Farms, Va.

The District selectees are as follows:

Board No. 1—Robert W. McKinnie, 1419 Hopkins st. nw.; Burnell Shelton, Hazlehurst, Miss.; Fabian S. Hughes, 2129 Leroy pl., nw.; Vincent D. Griffin, 2500 41st st. nw.; Joseph R. Two Top Yugoslavs Suspended in Plot

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, Sept. 9 (U.P.).—Two high ranking Communist leaders have been suspended from government and party posts in the most serious Cominform plot discovered against Marshal Tito since the break with Moscow, it was reported today.

The two men were identified as Dushan Brvic, vice premier of Croatia, and Rade Zigic, president of the Council for Croatian Processing Industries, a key economic position in the most industrialized of the six Yugoslav republics.

Brvic is a member of the National Central Committee of the Yugoslav Communist Party. Zigic is a candidate for the same central committee.

In answer to questions, the Yugoslav press office said only that the two Communist leaders were not arrested. The office refused other details.

But high-ranking Croatian government officials confirmed the report to Western Power officials stationed in Zagreb after wild rumors about it circulated there.

Suspension of the two officials came on the night of September 6-7, according to reliable reports. The discovery of serious defection in Yugoslav Communist ranks followed reports of increased Cominform infiltration and subversive activity in Yugoslavia.

Some reports said they refused to denounce the Cominform in speeches, were completely under Soviet influence, and had rekindled historic enmity between Serbs and Croats.

Other Communist officials have disappeared from the political scene during the past two years after being "suspended" for Cominform activity. But Brvic and Zigic are the first important Communist Party members suspended since the removal from office in May, 1948, of Sereztan Zhujo, vice minister of finance, and Andrij A. Hebrang, then minister of light industry. That was before the final break with Moscow.

It was officially announced today that on Monday the twice postponed trial of seven Cominform agents will open in Nis, Serbia. All seven are Yugoslavs.

Tip From Stettin

Dad's Belief Flier Is Alive Is Bolstered

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (AP).—A little Brooklyn waiter, who won't believe his son, a World War II flier, is dead, said today he now believes his boy may be alive in a Russian labor camp.

Six years ago, the War Department informed Harry Lepselter that his only son, Nathan, was missing in action after a bomber flight over France.

But the 56-year-old Lepselter and his wife wouldn't believe it. They sent circulars and pictures of their sergeant son to newspaper offices here and in France. They visited veterans' conventions, always hoping that something would happen to reunite them with their boy.

Today their hopes were revived.

From Nuernberg, Germany, Lepselter said, came word from a woman that she believed she had seen Nathan in a factory in Polish-occupied Stettin.

The news came in a letter written by Mrs. Brigitte Pollmann who, the father said, volunteered more than a year ago to help them in their heart-breaking search.

Lepselter quoted Mrs. Pollmann as saying that she heard Nathan might be among prisoners held incommunicado by the Russians in Stettin. She managed to get to Stettin and was taken by friends to tour the factory.

The German woman, Lepselter said, wrote that Lepselter was pointed out to her.

"I called 'Nat,'" she continued, "and he turned around quickly as if he had received a shock."

Then, she said, before she could speak to him further, she was forced to leave the factory.

Lepselter said Mrs. Pollman believed the man was held in the factory because he was an electronics expert.

The Lepselters have sent out more than 24,000 photographs of their missing son, their long search has cost them an estimated $7500.

"If I thought for a minute he was dead, I would give up, too," the graying little man said. "But I know—I know he is alive."

Pleven's Paper Foresees Years Of 'Austerity'

PARIS, Sept. 9.—The necessity of rearming is going to mean "several years of austerity' for France, Premier Rene Pleven's own newspaper announced today.

Le Petit Bleu, the small Breton weekly of which the government chief is the political director, said that since the whole object of Western rearmament was defensive and aimed at preserving peace, "no occasion for easing the international tension ought to be neglected."

The weekly added that "France certainly would be the first to swap austerity for abundance if those who are obsessed by the 'class' and 'empire' struggles would only get the notion that the world can live in peace."

France Orders Expulsion Of 404 Foreign Reds

PARIS, Sept. 9 (AP)—France has issued orders to expel 404 foreign Communists from the country in the current security drive. The Communist press had put the figure at 700.

An announcement by the Interior Ministery also contradicted "the untrue reports of certain newspapers which have received imperative instructions from a certain political group to minimize the results of the operations undertaken in the view of public opinion."

The phrasing indicated that the political group meant was that of Gen. Charles de Gaulle. Like the Communists, it opposes the present middle-of-the-road government.

Of the 404 orders signed, the ministry said, 288 have so far been served. The others are directed against persons known to be on trips abroad.

Bomb-Shelters $150 Down

Industrialist Returns

JACOB BLAUSTEIN, Baltimore industrialist and president of the American-Jewish Committee, arrived in New York yesterday aboard the liner Caronia from a four-week visit to Israel and Europe. Blaustein flew to Israel at the invitation of Prime Minister Ben Gurion to discuss relationship of Israel to Jews in other countries

Reds Encircle Berlin With Loop Railway

BERLIN, Sept. 9 (NYHT.).—A rail loop encircling the city of Berlin was put in trial service last week and proved satisfactory, making it possible for the first time for the Communists to transport freight or troops across eastern Germany without bringing them under the surveillance of the western Allied authorities.

The new installation has been under construction since 1947. Until now it has been impossible to move trains across eastern Germany without passing them through the western sectors of Berlin since the city's traditional position as Germany's railway center made it the meeting point for all the major rail lines.

With the new loop, the city is completely encircled with rail lines entirely in Communist hands.

"The outer freight ring" is of obvious strategic value to the Russians in peace, in war or in the event of the outbreak of some sort of "German incident." In time of peace it conceals the movement of reparations from the east zone to Russia and its satellites.

Stripper's Python Lost, But He 'Loves People'

RUTLAND, Vt., Sept. 9 (AP).—Where's Elmer? Rutland's fair roustabouts, police and a lot of other people would like to know.

Elmer, an 8½-ft. python, escaped from a cardboard box yesterday. His owner, Strip Actress Zorita, says he "loves people and is just like a little boy." Zorita assured police that the snake's bite is harmless.

British Conservatives Will Support Labor

LONDON, Sept. 9. — Winston Churchill, leader of the Conservative Party, tonight announced that it will support the Labor government in the debate on defense due next week in Commons. The house is to meet Tuesday on legislation to extend the conscription period from 18 months to 2 years.

Churchill's announcement ended widespread speculation — and considerable apprehension in governmental quarters—that he might challenge the government, in an attempt to overthrow it and force a general election at which he would ask the British electorate to put the Conservatives into power with him as Prime Minister.

It was believed Churchill decided that such a challenge might create a harmful impression, not only among some of Great Britain's allies but also among the British people.

"The Conservative Party will support the government motion, the terms of which have now been published, and will not move any amendments thereto," Churchill said in his announcement, issued from his winter home in Kent.

This does not mean that the wartime British Prime Minister will relax in his attacks on the government's over-all policy. He will not oppose it on the issues of a longer conscription period and measures to increase servicemen's pay and otherwise improve their condition, in order to spur recruiting.

Lord Woolton, Conservative Party chairman, told a rally of Conservatives today that the party will support the Labor government only so long as the government takes adequate steps to protect Britain and uphold its prestige in the world.

1000 Dead in India Quake

Franco, Cabinet Talk Of Inclusion in ECA

CORUNA, Spain, Sept. 9 (AP).—Generalissimo Franco and his Cabinet, in an all-night session at Franco's nearby summer home, discussed Spain's "inclusion" in the European Cooperation Administration.

It was the first time any governmental discussion of Spain's possible inclusion in the ECA had been announced. The discussion resulted from United States congressional action in voting a $62,500,000 loan to Spain.

Ban on Non-Catholics Reported in Colombia

BOGOTA, Colombia, Sept. 9 (AP).—The Newspaper El Liberal reported today that Col. Nesor Mesa Prieto, chief of the Caqueta territory in southeast Colombia, has banned all religious worship other than that of the Roman Catholic church there.

The dispatch, from Florencia, said police had been ordered to break up all non-Catholic religious gatherings. A secretary for the Minister of Interior here said he had not heard of the Caqueta decree.

U. S. Students Stranded on European Tour

PARIS, Sept. 9 (AP).—The American Legion came up with free food and legal advice tonight for 180 American students and teachers stranded in Paris, but it couldn't solve their main problem—how to get home in a hurry.

The travelers got stuck nine days ago when arrangements for their return flight after a summer tour of Europe broke down.

Their cash evaporated and some ttold of missing their meals.

Spokesman for the group attributed their plight to failure of the Student Travel Service of Chicago and New York to pay a charter airline which had contracted to fly them home. Each of the tourists paid the service $355 for round-trip transportation, the spokesman declared.

Others Stranded in London

Besides the three flights of about 60 stranded in Paris, a fourth of roughly the same number was in a similar predicament in London.

Tom Floyd, Paris, agent for the Travel Service, said tonight the French group "may leave Sunday."

"They've been saying that every day for nine days,' snapped a spokesman for the marooned tourists.

Floyd said an agent of the Tiger airline — made up of ex-pilots in the Flying Tigers of China war fame—was trying to reach his New York office to check if the home trips had been paid for. Floyd declared earlier that "apparently there just wasn't enough money for the return flights."

Being Worked Out

In Burbank, Calif., the Flying Tiger Airline's headquarters, a spokesman said that although the flights "are not completely paid for," arrangements are being made to fly all four groups of students to the United States "within the next few days."

The matter is now being worked out between the airline and the travel service, the spokesman said, and planes will shortly be made available to the students.

The Tiger Airline previously completed four round trips for the travel service clients.

Some, in dire financial circumstances, got small loans arranged by the American Embassy through the Travelers Aid Society. Most of the travelers prepared to spend the night in low-cost Paris hotels, on their own or borrowed money.

Communism Subject Of Forum on WWDC

Radio Station WWDC's District Round Table, Sunday at 10 p. m., will discuss "Is an Understanding of Communism Necessary to the American Fighting Man Today?"

Taft Calls Upon President To Make Spain Loan Available

By the United Press

Senator Taft (R., Ohio) called on President Truman yesterday to "follow the obvious desires of the American people" and make available a loan to Spain.

At the same time, Senator McCarran (D., Nev.) hinted at a possible later attempt to upset the President's announced decision to hold up a $62,500,000 Spanish loan which Congress directed be made. It was written into the $35,500,000,000 appropriation bill for Government operation.

Taft told a reporter before he left for Ohio to resume his reelection campaign that he is convinced the people generally want Spain brought into the defensive lineup against possible Russian attack in Europe. He implied the loan would help accomplish this.

"The President may be the chief architect of foreign policy but I think he is too unresponsive to the public's views and to those of members of Congress," the chairman of the Senate GOP Policy Committee said.

Taft said that while he doesn't condone the form of the Franco government any more than Mr. Truman does, he believes the time has come to gather all of the anti-Communist countries into the defense lineup.

He said that if a loan to Spain were used at least in part to strengthen that country's defenses, he sees no reason why it should not be made.

Taft said he feels that Spain could add substantially to a European defense force which Senator Dodge (R., Mass.) told the Senate yesterday might require the services of 20 American divisions in Europe.

Lodge's proposal that United States ground strength be built up to 30 divisions got Taft's support, but the Ohio Senator said he doesn't want any sizable addition to American forces in Europe committed until there is an over-all defense plan.

With Spain in the lineup, he said the American contribution might not have to be as large as otherwise.

Taft conceded there may not be any practical way for Congress to force a loan to Spain in the face of presidential opposition. The United States has withdrawn its Ambassador from Madrid in line with United Nations resolution calling for such action and condemning the Franco government as undemocratic. It retains diplomatic relations, however.

Greek Parliament Votes Cabinet Out

ATHENS, Sept. 8 (AP).—The Greek Parliament today defeated the 19-day-old caretaker government led by Liberal Premier Sophocles Venizelos.

An adverse vote of 124 to 106 forced the Venizelos cabinet out. The Premier announced he is asking for an audience with King Paul Sunday morning to tender his formal resignation.

The short-lived government was formed of Liberals and Socialist-Democrat members led by George Papandreou, who was Deputy Premier. It was sworn in August 21, replacing a government led by former Premier Gen. Nicholas Plastiras.

Venizelos previously had said that if his government was voted down by Parliament he would recommend that new general elections be held. However, observers said political sentiment is overwhelmingly against holding elections now.

Plastiras, leader of the leftist National Progressive Union, was forced to quit as Premier after five Liberal members of his Cabinet announced they would resign in protest against his policy of granting pardons to Communists convicted of treason.

Venizelos had formed his caretaker Cabinet to run the nation's affairs until he could gather together a Cabinet of sufficient political scope to win support of a majority of parliament.

Present Weapons Seen Holding Own For Several Years

Military research experts said last night they look for no "push-button warfare" developments in the next several years that will make present weapons obsolete.

Regardless of what is now being forecast about earth satellite vehicles and supersonic, target-seeking guided missiles, there still will be need for conventional aircraft and longe-range guns, a spokesman said.

About the progress on guided missiles, he would say only that:

"We are not only trying to keep up with the Russians, but ahead of them. Of course. And we think we are. it goes without saying that we would like to know a lot more about the progress the Russians have made."

Another spokesman said the United States has not made the progress he would like to have seen by now on guided missiles. He indicated that real efficiency in operation of this weapon is a long way off.

On this occasion Russia was turning over control of the city to the United States for September

Debt Can Hurt U. S. Cause, Says Byrd

FOREST, Va., Sept. 9 (AP).—Senator Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.) said today that the United States have been maneuvered to a point "where they are fiscally vulnerable from within and perhaps so greatly extended that they may be militarily vulnerable from without."

"Neither democracy nor freedom can survive in either the shackles of overwhelming debt or the bondage of military dictatorship," the Virginia senator told the annual field day crowd assembled at "Ivy Hill," Bedford County farm of Herbert Bruce Thomson.

He said we must "get down to the sweat and the toil of the work that is required to make this country fiscally sound and militarily impregnable."

Russia is hoping for an economic collapse in the United States, Byrd said, because of the "traditional American reluctance to give up luxuries as usual, business as usual and politics as usual."

On the Korean situation, Byrd said "we were forced to go to war in Korea without effective preparation, although we had spent 60 billion dollars for national defense in the past five years."

Allies Close Gap In Line Above Taegu

American and South Korean forces moving west from Kyongju.

Communist tank columns had opened the hole earlier in the week.

Situation 'Much Improved'

Yongchon, gateway city to Taegu 20 miles westward, was recaptured by South Koreans Friday from the armor-led Reds who had held it briefly. The ousted Reds poured artillery and mortar fire on the city. The North Korean radio has claimed possession of Yongchon for two days.

Several groups of Reds were pocketed by the forces that closed the Yongchong-Kyongju opening.

A United States Eighth Army spokesman said the situation along the newly restored northern U. N. defense line late Saturday was "much improved."

In the south U. S. Twenty-fifth Division infantrymen killed 1500 of the 3000 Reds who wrested Battle Mountain from them Saturday. It was the third time in one day and the thirteenth time in three weeks the mountain had changed hands.

The Red losses boosted their casualties for the week to more than 15,000 men on the southern front alone, and raised official U. S. estimates of Red losses on all fronts to 27,000 in eight days—about 18 percent of their estimated 150,000-man force.

First Cavalry Holds Fast

North Koreans captured Battle Mountain with a dawn attack Saturday. Outnumbered Americans retook it later in the day, but the Reds seized it again despite an American artillery barrage of 7000 rounds and several strikes by United States planes.

There was lesser action on two other Korean fronts.

United States First Cavalry troops, defending Taegu on the north and northwest, stood their ground solidly Saturday against constant enemy pressure.

The Americans held high ridges seven miles north of Taegu to which they withdrew Friday before Red assaults down the Kumhwa "bowling alley" corridor from the northwest.

The enemy probed hard all along the line, apparently in an effort to keep the defenders off balance until North Korean reinforcements could be brought up.

Red strikes at United States Second Division positions west of Yongsan and against British army positions west of Taegu on the Naktong River front were turned back. The defenders lost no ground.

Allied planes got in 140 close-support missions late Saturday when the weather cleared. Most of the strikes were delivered at the Reds concentrating before the newly formed defense line between Yonchon and Kyongju.

Australian Ace Killed

Other planes struck at Red pockets east of the Naktong River on the United States Second Division front.

The renewed air fighting was costly to the small group of Royal Australian Mustang fighter pilots whose main mission has been dare-devil close-up ground support work.

The Australians lost their wing commander, L. T. Spence, whose record covered fighting in North Africa and the Pacific in World War II. Spence failed to pull his F-51 out of a steep dive over Red positions near Angang, west of the east coast port of Pohang. His plane crashed and exploded.

Since the Allied forces stabilized their beachhead more than a month ago, the Reds have made several major power assaults in bloody attacks on the lines. Reckless of losses, they have scored some successes, and the Allies have been forced to shorten their lines in some instances, but the North Koreans have been unable to exploit their first breakthrough.

Associated Press Correspondent Erickson reported Saturday that the main force of the most recent Red offensive against the northern wall had been spent.

He warned that the Reds were keeping up their pressure there, however.

Lieut. Gen. Walton H. Walker, Eighth Army commander, said earlier that the Red offensive which began September 1 was the largest since the North Koreans invaded the south June 23.

Walker said last Sunday, September 3, was his darkest day. The Reds aimed savage blows at both ends of the battle front on that day. Both finally were stopped cold.

Pohang Field Defenders Near Encirclement

By Robert Bennyhoff

KYONGJU, Korea, Sept. 9 (U.P.). An estimated two North Korean battalions of foot soldiers swept to within 6 miles of the Japan Sea and 2 miles of the Pohang airport today in an attempt to encircle South Koreans and Americans trying desperately to hang on to the field.

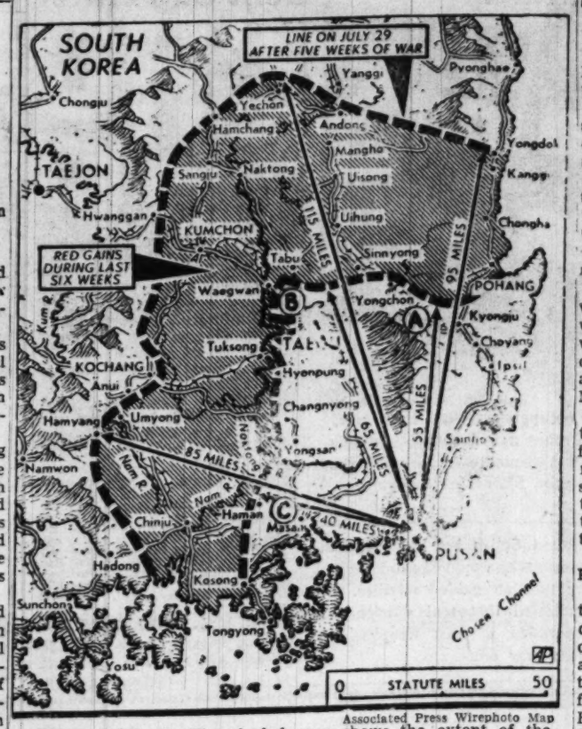
The North Koreans, traveling in small groups over a tortuous mountain path, moved in to help other Communist forces trying to spring a trap on the South Koreans, Negro infantrymen and artillery units holding the now-idle airfield.

If the advance is not stopped, enemy forces are in a position not only to cut one road leading south along the coast from the airstrip, but also to encircle the entire Third Republic of Korea division.

The Comunists are traveling in company-sized bands through some of the most rugged mountains in Korea. Last Wednesday, I walked and rode through this same terrain, leaving burned-out Pohang. The mountain trails pass under and along steep cliffs.

Scattered units of the South Korean Third and Capital Divisions have been trying to halt the Red spearheads. They have had little success.

Red Gains in Past Six Weeks



Associated Press Wirephoto Map

SINCE JULY 29—The shaded area shows the extent of the North Korean gains against United Nations defenders in South Korea during the past six weeks—from July 29 until noon, EST, Saturday. The Allied defense perimeter had shrunk to approximately 120 miles. Arrows show how Reds have shortened distances from three points on battle line to the supply post of Pusan. American and South Korean soldiers (A) closed a gap in defense perimeter between Yongchon and Kyongju to ease North Korean threat to Taegu. South Koreans drove east from Yongchon while Yanks and South Koreans pushed west from Kyongju. United States troops withstood continual enemy pressure north and northwest of Taegu (B). British units also turned back an enemy assault west of Taegu. In the Yongsan-Masan sectors (C) Allies beat off Red assaults, although GIs gave up Battle Mountain, west of Masan, after retaking it from Reds combining training in different subjects so they might be carried out at the same time. He said the recruit now is introduced first to the weapons and tactics he will find most necessary in battle and his training progresses from that point into the broader aspects of soldiering. But the emphasis, he declared, is always on producing soldiers "who have not only the know-how but also the will and determination to fight."

The same process of meeting the demands of combat service by shortening and intensifying training has been applied to the Army's schools, Clark said. In addition, he said, it has been extended to reserve and National Guard units which have been called into Federal service and to those still waiting to be called. This has resulted, he explained, in "reducing substantially" the 36 weeks regarded as necessary to complete training of these units after induction.

Clark revealed in his statement that teams of combat veterans from Korea will be formed to help train units training for combat in that theater. This, he explains, will be in addition to the standard practice of sending observers to the combat zone at regular intervals to report on lessons learned from combat with the enemy.

Clark closed his lengthy statement with a caution that "there are no get-rich-quick or pushbutton methods by which wars can be won in the foreseeable future without fighting ground battles." He added:

"It always has been, and it still is, the infantryman with his stout and courageous heart that is the dominant factor on the field of battle. He must be effectively supported, of course, by the Air Force, the Navy, and other arms and services of the Army. In the last analysis, however, the man who decides the final issue is the infantryman who slugs it out face to face with the enemy and takes and holds ground."

In another field of training, the Army announced that senior division reserve officer students in schools and colleges would be increased from 120,500 to 154,500 in the 1950-51 academic year. This increase of 34,000, it was explained, will be made up of 9000 additional junior and senior students in the advanced course and 25,000 additional in the basic course, senior division.

Death of Boy in Army 5 Months Confirmed

By The Associated Press

The Army confirmed yesterday that 17-year-old Pfc. Vernon Hawthorne of Miami, Fla., who died of wounds in Korea on August 13, had enlisted in the Army only five months previously—on March 10 this year.

An Army spokesman said the service has not yet received any request from Representative Smathers (D., Fla.) to investigate the case, but that an investigation will be made if Representative Smathers requests one. State Representative Okell has said in Florida yesterday that, on behalf of the boy's father, Ira David Hawthorne of Miami, he has asked Smathers to investigate.

The father had said he had been led to believe his son "would have had no less than a year's training in this country and possibly three years."

Truman Approves Troop Aid

last-minute meetings with the House and Senate Foreign Relations Committees to discuss policy.

The fact that Mr. Truman's statement yesterday consisted of one sentence of announcement of the decision, and five more all saying, in different ways, that there must be matching action by other nations in increasing their armed forces, shows the emphasis which the President meant to express.

He did not, of course, spell out what the desired ratio should be—whether one new European division for each American, or two or three or more. That, presumably, will be debated the coming New York meetings.

The exact number of divisions, the makeup of the combined forces, and other military arrangements will depend on decisions by the defense ministers of the 12 North Atlantic treaty nations who will meet here in October.

Following is the text of the President's statement:

"On the basis of recommendations of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, concurred in by the Secretaries of State and Defense, I have today approved substantial increases in the strength of the United States forces to be stationed in Western Europe in the interest of the defense of that area. The extent of these increases and the timing thereof will be worked out in close coordination with our North Atlantic Treaty partners. A basic element in the implementation of this decision is the degree to which our friends match our actions in this regard. Firm programs for the development of their forces will be expected to keep full step with the dispatch of additional United States forces to Europe. Our plans are based on the sincere expectation that our efforts will be met with similar action on their part. The purpose of this measure is to increase the effectiveness of our collective defense efforts and thereby insure the maintenance of peace."

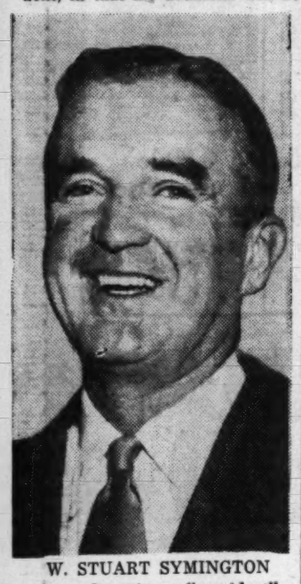
Truman Warns U. S. Of Belt-Tightening

tion board, comprised of three members each from labor, management and the public, which may become another war labor board.

Over-all coordination of all controls, defense production expansion and economic mobilization will be exercised by the chairman of the National Security Resources Board, W. Stuart Symington.

Under terms of the executive order, he will act for the President, in that his decisions will be final in settling any disputes between the several other Federal agencies involved in the program.



W. STUART SYMINGTON
. . . made assistant "president"

Although the President's speech was a forceful one, it contained few surprises. Most of the Administrative arrangements he spelled out had been anticipated in press stories, including—even though Mr. Truman denied it on Thursday—the creation of the new stabilization agency.

Asks Excess Profits Tax

For the first time, however, Mr. Truman officially gave his blessing to enactment of an excess profits tax, and one that should be retroactive to the beginning of the Korean conflict.

The pending $4,500,000,000 tax increase, he said, "is only the first installment." Congress should enact new levies, as soon as possible, he continued, with provision to "recapture excess profits made since the start of the Communist aggression in Korea."

Also for the first time, the President complained specifically of the rigid provision in the new law that links wage fixings with price fixing on each commodity to be controlled on a selective basis. He implied he might seek a change in the law to correct this point.

A significant point in his speech, twice repeated, was what seemed to be a promise to labor that its wages could increase to meet rises in the cost of living. This would seem to remove the prospect of a rigid shackling of wages to the levels obtaining as of any single period.

Stresses Inflation Peril

Mr. Truman devoted much of his speech to a discussion of inflation—its dangers and its prevention.

It will hurt far less, he said, to pay higher taxes now than to let prices get out of hand. He warned that we must not repeat the mistake of World War II, when "we borrowed too much and did not tax ourselves enough."

Businessmen, he contended, can do much to help by not raising prices beyond cost increases or—as he said some have done—even without any cost increases.

Those who have raised prices without corresponding increases in costs should reduce prices immediately, for what they have done "is just plain profiteering, and should not be tolerated."

Many businesses, Mr. Truman went on, now enjoy large enough profit margins so that they do not need to raise prices even if their costs increase.

The President pleaded with housewives not to buy more than they need. He took occasion on the one hand to praise recent organization of anti-hoarding and anti-panic-buying groups, and one the other, to jibe at those people who rushed out in fear buying during June and July.

In postponing his Fair Deal objectives, the President said.

"We have not given up our goal of a better life for every citizen in this great country of ours. But, for the time being, we have to make absolutely sure that our economy turns out the guns and planes and tanks and other supplies which are needed to protect the world from the threat of Communist domination."

Two Orders Are Complex

The two executive orders which the President issued yesterday to put new economic controls into effect were complex affairs.

The one ordering all persons who sold goods or services to preserve their records of all prices and all costs, including labor costs, during the month preceding the Korean outbreak, does not mean the ceilings will be rolled back to the then-existing levels. But in accordance with the intent of the law, the levels of that period are the ones against which new rations should be applied.

Powers Defined

The second order made arrangements for the administration of each of the powers granted in the new legislation.

The President ordered that power to allocate materials, requisition, fix priorities and control inventories should be given to the Secretary of Interior for fuels and electric power; to the Secretary of Agriculture for food and the distribution of farm equipment and fertilizer; to the Interstate Commerce Commission for rail and truck transportation, and to the Secretary of Commerce for everything else—mainly industrial items.

The Defense Department, Commerce, Interior, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the General Services Administration will have the responsibility of increasing capacity and supply by loans, advance contracting and other financial measures.

The Federal Reserve Board is given power to control the issuance of private credit for housing construction, and the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to set conditions and rates for Federal credit for housing. But both agencies are obliged to coordinate their activities so that a consistent policy is obtained.

The Secretary of Labor was made responsible for the whole problem of labor supply.

Crippled Child Society Ousts Louisiana Unit

CHICAGO, Sept. 9 (AP).—The Louisiana Society for Crippled Children was ousted today from membership in the National Society for Crippled Children and adults.

William H. Jaenicke of San Frncisco, president of the national group, said the action was taken by the larger organization's executive committee after officers of the State had failed to defend conduct that led to public criticism of the Louisiana society.

He said the national society will take steps to help organize a new State member society in Louisiana to replace the organization dropped.

Charges that led to the State society's ousting included failure "to create and maintain public confidence and respect on the part of substantial citizens and of the State of Louisiana, of the local press and reviewing agencies," and failure "to adopt and conform to the recommendations presented to it (the State society) by the National Society for Crippled Children and Adults, Inc., on April 30, 1950."

D. C. Masons Give 100 Pints Of Blood

More than 1000 pints of blood have been given to the Red Cross by District Masons during the first nine months of a blood donation program sponsored by the Grand Lodge of the District of Columbia.

The blood donations, announced by Thomas H. Evans, administrator of the Red Cross Washington regional blood center, came from members of 48 Masonic lodges.

L. Malcolm Graham, chairman of the Grand Lodge blood program, at the same time made a special appeal to all lodges to double their donations to help those fighting in Korea and the Red Cross as well.

The Red Cross blood center, 1730 E st. nw., last week distributed a total of 623 pints of blood to hospitals in the District and communities covered by the Bloodmobile in Virginia, Maryland and West Virginia.

The following four visits are scheduled by the Bloodmobile this week:

Hagerstown, Md., St. John's Parish House, S. Potomac st., 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. Monday; Martinsburg, W. Va., First Presbyterian Church, S. Queen st., 11 a. m. to 5 p. m. Tuesday; Fort Belvoir, Va., recreation hall, 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. Wednesday, and Winchester, Va., Presbyterian Church, 10 a. m. to 4 p. m. Thursday.

Rusk Urges Treaty to Return Japan to International Life

CLEVELAND, Sept. 9 (AP).—Assistant Secretary of State Dean Rusk, in a sweeping statement of American policies toward Asia, spoke out tonight for action on a Japanese peace treaty.

Turning to the controversial Formosan problem, Rusk stated that the United States, while working for a peaceful settlement, will continue economic aid and will furnish "selected military assistance" to strengthen the island's defenses against attack.

Concerning Japan, Rusk said "the time has come to move toward a Japanese peace settlement and to make it possible for Japan to accept the full privileges and responsibilities of international life to which her people are now entitled."

In an address before the national convention of American Veterans of World War II, Rusk laid down a program covering United States relations with the Far East.

Evidently referring to the long-standing domestic political controversy over American policy in the Far East, Rusk said:

"We need not be ashamed of a policy which concerned itself with the building of the peace, the advance of human liberty and the raising of the standards of living of men and women in every quarter of the globe."

Among the points in his program of action were:

The United States shall support the national aspirations of the people of Asia to be free, to determine their own institutions, to select their own rulers, and to regulate their relations with others on the basis of consent.

The United States insists on the end of hostilities between Formosa, held by the Chinese Nationalists, and Communist China "and shall support a peaceful settlement of the Formosa problem by international action."

The United States will try to find a way to maintain the traditional friendship between the American and Chinese peoples and make clear that it has "no aggressive designs whatever upon China." At the same time this country will take a "most serious view of acts of aggression which might be set in motion in mainland China in behalf of a Communist conspiracy."

Rusk added at this point that "we shall not accept the right of any clique in China to preside over the dismemberment of China for the benefit of Soviet imperialism."

Truman Vetoes Bill to Curb Citizenship

President Truman yesterday vetoed a bill denying citizenship to persons who may seek covertly to overthrow the Government through association with Communist-front organizations.

At the same time he asked Congress to reenact another section of the measure which he had recommended. That section says the right to become a naturalized citizen should not be denied or abridged because of race. The effect would be to grant naturalization rights to American residents of Asiatic origin.

In a message returning the measure to the House, Mr. Truman said the language of the section on Communist-front groups "is so vague and ill-defined that no one can tell what it may mean or how it may be applied."

Might Weaken Laws

"The result," he said, "might be to weaken our naturalization laws rather than strengthen them. The result might also be to jeopardize the basic rights of our naturalized citizens and other persons legitimately admitted to the United States.

"In my judgment, it would be impossible to administer this act without creating a twilight species of second-class citizens—persons who could be deprived of citizenship on technical grounds, through their ignorance or lack of judgment."

Fears Greater Threat

The President said the United States should not adopt what he called prohibitory and punitive statutes without being absolutely sure that the proposed laws are not a greater threat than the things against which they are aimed.

"This is particularly true in the present case," he asserted, "since we already have strong laws protecting us against the naturalization of subversive persons."

In reference to the section which the President wants, he wrote:

"At a time when the United Nations forces are fighting gallantly to uphold the principles of freedom and democracy in Korea, it would be unworthy of our traditions if we continue now to deny the right of citizenship to American residents of Asiatic origin."

U. S. Opposes Seating China Reds at Talks

LAKE SUCCESS, Sept. 9 (NYHT).—The United States today disclosed it would oppose inviting the Chinese Communists to the United Nations Security Council next week for either the Peiping regime's complaints of American bombing of Manchuria or American intervention in Formosa.

Ambassador Ernest A. Gross, American deputy delegate, told reporters the United States would welcome appointment of fact-finders free to proceed to the scenes and there hear anyone, including the Chinese Reds.

The American statement came despite a Chinese Communist threat to bar any U. N. bombing investigators from Manchuria unless a Peiping representative was admitted to the council table first.

Will Meet Monday

The Council is to meet Monday on the Manchurian incident, after having agreed last Thursday to take up a Soviet bid to invite the Chinese Communists to the debate ahead of either the American inquiry proposal or a Soviet condemnation of the alleged American strafing.

The Chinese Communist warning came in the form of a broadcast by the official Peiping radio.

The broadcast quoted "an authoritative source" as saying that "China is the victimized party involved in the (Manchurian) question, and the accuser."

Any inquiry set up without Chinese Communist participation, the broadcast continued, would be "illegal" and "unaccpetable to the Chinese people."

Gross said the United States would still press for some sort of U. N. investigation.

Complaint of "Aggression"

The Formosa case involves a Chinese Communist complaint of American "aggression" in use of the Seventh Fleet to avert fighting between the Red-held mainland and the Nationalist-held island during the Korean conflict. It is on the council's books for debate after the Manchurian problem.

In the meantime, Western delegations here were forecasting a new Soviet-bloc campaign against atomic weapons—based on the Stockholm "world peace appeal," now claiming 300,000,000 signatures around the globe—as the probable major Soviet propaganda theme in the United Nations General Assembly, opening 10 days from now.

Some delegations forecast western counter-strategy would evolve on some framework such as a Chilean proposal seeking to build up Assembly powers to deal with aggression in view of the Soviet vetoes blocking Security Council work.

The State Department has been circulating what it calls a "fact sheet" on atomic energy, which rejects limited controls or proposals to ban large-scale atomic production.

Democratic Post Appointment Backfires

former member of the state Democratic committee and was a 1948 national convention delegate.

But when the story hit the front pages in St. Louis and Kansas City, Democratic Chairman William Boyle said he had never heard of Shenker but merely approved him in a batch of names submitted for the finance committee.

The national chairman told the Kansas City Star, before he departed for the weekend, that Shenker's name "undoubtedly" was suggested by Thomas C. Hennings, jr., the Democratic nominee for Senator to oppose Senator Forrest C. Donnell. Donnell so far has had no public comment but there appears to be general agreement the Democrats have handed him a handy campaign issue on a silver platter.

The Kansas City Star said yesterday that Shenker's clients included friends of Charles Binaggio, the murdered Kansas City Democratic Party boss.

Salomon Is Treasurer

The new Democratic Party Louis insurance man. The party treasurer is Sidney Salomon, a St. announcement said Shenker was named by Salomon and Boyle.

The finance committeemen, who will have to dig up the money to pay for the 1950 campaign, will gather in New York later this month for a big cocktail party to kick off the drive. Party leaders will be present but just who hasn't been announced.

While this fuss was being raised on the periphery of the Senate Crime Committee yesterday, the committee itself met in an all-day closed session to hear three ex? members of the old Al Capone Chicago mob.

They were Paul (The Waiter) D'Lucia, known also as Paul Ricca; Louis (Little New York) Campagna, and Charles (Cherry Nose) Gioe—pronounced "joy." All three are on parole from Federal prison.

Movie Extortion Plot

The three men were convicted in 1944 in connection with a 1 million dollar movie extortion plot and were paroled after serving three years and four months of 10-year sentences.

Their parole brought a stormy Congressional investigation in 1947 and 1948. It turned out that $25,000 in fees had been paid to two attorneys to help free the men. One attorney, Paul Dillon of St. Louis, testified that while in Washington to appear before the parole board for the gangsters he was entertained at the White House by President Truman.

The other attorney, Maury Hughes of Dallas, Texas, said he was a life-long friend of Tom Clark, then Attorney General and now a Supreme Court Justice. Hughes testified he did not discuss with Clark his pleas for successful dismissal of mail-fraud indictments against the trio, paving the way for the paroles.

At yesterday's hearings, the Senate committee went over much of this same ground, it appeared. Kefauver said later that Ricca was "rather evasive" and had trouble "remembering details." He did admit, however, that he makes about $40,000 a year from his 1100-acre Illinois farm. He testified, the Senator said, that he still doesn't know who was kind enough to pay a $120,000 tax bill to Uncle Sam for him before he was paroled.

Marine Major Reports Pair Assaulted Him

Maj. William L. Gaffney, 34, United States Marine Headquarters, reported to Prince Georges County police yesterday that he had been assaulted by two men he had picked up in a Washington night club.

Maj. Gaffney was taken to Leland Memorial Hospital where he was treated for severe bruises on the face and an injury to the eye and later released.

The officer said he met the two men in a downtown night club and that they proposed a visit to other Maryland clubs. An argument ensued on University lane near Northwest Branch and the major was beaten by the two men.

Prince Georges County Police Hyattsville recommended to Gaffney that he secure a warrant for the two men, the name of one of whom he said he knew. Lieut. Comdr. Ralph N. Pickles, USN, head of the Armed Forces Police here, was investigating the affair.

Earth Distortion To Be Measured

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 9 (AP).—Two UCLA scientific parties will attempt to measure the earth's distortion during a solar eclipse next Tuesday, from vantage points in Attu, Alaska, and Lake Tahoe, Calif.

The Attu party, in the direct path of the eclipse, will be headed by Dr. John Pettit and Wesley Miller, flown by the Navy from Seattle last week. The Lake Tahoe party is under Dr. Louis B. Slichter, director of UCLA's Institute of Geophysics.

It is said to be the first attempt to record small distortions brought on by an eclipse. Sun and moon affect oceans, cause tides, but that they also may distort land surfaces as much as four feet is not generally known outside scientific circles.

Defense Effort Scrutinized

est military link. Senator Lester Hunt (D., Wyo.) yesetrday was named chairman of the group's Alaskan problems. Other members are Senators Leverett Saltonstall (R., Mass.) and Senator Wayne Morse (R., Oreg.). Col. Justice M. (Joe) Chambers of the Senate Armed Services Committee's professional staff, with an investigator, will go to Alaska late this month. The Senators will join them later.

Check on Ordinance

4. An investigation into questions, particularly into how willing Ordnance has been to accept "outside" ideas plus its relations with the field and equipment boards of the "using" arms as well as the Research and Development Board. Other sources indicated the probers would want to know why the new 3.5-inch bazooka and other new weapons were not in the hands of troops when the Korean war started.

Johnson will head this "task force" of the Preparedness subcommittee, assisted by Senators Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) and Styles Bridges (R., N.H.). Col. Mark Galusha of the committee staff will head the investigation.

(5) A broad manpower study, with particular attention paid to "when, how and what changes must be made in the draft act." The group also is charged with drafting a new universal military training bill by next January.

Senator Johnson has not yet named subcommittees or "task forces" to go into the manpower, critical materials and steel studies, but work is getting under way on these probes.

Committe members, who already have made a study of the rubber situation, are concerned about world price changes in this and other scarce materials. They point out that rubber, nickel, tin, mercury, industrial diamonds, and other materials not produced in the United States but vital to our security come almost entirely from countries with which we are linked by defense pacts and to most of which we are giving economic or military aid.

Rigidly Controlled

In many cases, they state, the quantity produced and price is rigidly controlled by monopoly corporations of our Allies. This affects not only our stockpiling program but also our armaments production for both ourselves and these same Allies. Recent price changes could add many hundreds of millions of dollars to American spending.

Some Senators feel a "Government-to-Government" approach, tied in with ECA, might help in this field. While ECA has worked on this and brought in stockpile materials under the counterpart program, there is feeling that much more could be done.

For the present, the Johnson committee's small staff plans basic studies in the field of steel and critical materials, using information on file with Government agencies as far as possible. One element in the steel study which interests some of the Senators is whether the industry is too greatly concentrated from a security viewpoint, in case of heavy bombing raids.

There are no immediate plans to call in leaders of the steel industry for hearings on the adequacy of our present plants, though this is likely before the probe is complete.

Hearings on the Army Ordnance investigation are expected to start next month. Preliminary work already is under way. The Alaskan study will include such questions as possible subversive elements in the labor movement there. Strikes have delayed some military construction. Housing and the progress on the radar net also are scheduled for close scrutiny.

The seven-man Senate subcommittee already has done yeoman work in its watchdog capacity. Named late in July by the Senate to maintain a "continuous watchfulness" over all defense matters, the group last week submitted its first report. It concerned rubber stockpiling and the disposal of surplus property.

While the report did not "make page one"—too often the sole objective of congressional investigating bodies—the preparedness subcommittee had the satisfaction of knowing that its efforts had: (1) Helped in doubling the projected rate of synthetic rubber production in the United States; (2) stopped the sale of at least one and perhaps four synthetic rubber plants for conversion to other use which had been declared surplus before the Korean crisis and apparently forgotten by military planners; (3) ended the disposal of aircraft parts at one Air Force base where there was evidence that the USAF was buying similar products elsewhere for many times the money; (4) put a bug in the ear in many a defense official, particularly in the Munitions Board, by their criticism of "business as usual" attitude and "siesta psychology" at the Pentagon.

Veterans on Capitol Hill, who had watched the Truman Committee and other investigating bodies, liked the approach of the new Preparedness Committee. They noted that its chief counsel was a man with unusual experience in Government. He is a high-placed official from "downtown" on loan part-time to the group without pay—Donald C. Cook, vice chairman of the SEC.

Cook, a George Washington law graduate who lives at 2800 Woodley rd., served in a similar capacity to the Old House Naval Affairs investigating subcommittee during the war. The then Representative Lyndon Johnson was chairman of the group.

Johnson, a lanky, tireless Texan, one of the youngest of Senators, laid down these rules for his Preparedness Committee: (1) "we will not hunt headlines"; (2) "politics must be left at the committee door;" (3) we'll be "blunt but not unfair"; (4) we won't try to be Monday morning quarterbacks on battlefront strategy but stick to defense problems at home.

Much of the success of the subcommittee's "watchfulness" program, Senators feel, will depend upon how the Executive agencies receive their prodding and criticism. A defensive argumentativeness on large and small points can only lead to unnecessary committee crackdowns. A willingness to admit mistakes and correct them quickly, on the other hand, would speed its job.

Austrian Soviet Zone Bans Eisenhower Book

VIENNA, Sept. 9 (U.P.).—Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's book, "Crusade in Europe," has been ordered confiscated in the Soviet zone of Austria, Ministry of Interior officials reported today.

The book is "Fascist literature," the Soviets said. Another book, "Austria From Hapsburg to Hitler," by American history Prof. Charles A. Gulick, has also been banned, the report said.

Maryland Primary Enters Battle Phase

issue and Administration unpreparedness for Korea.

Tydings heads the Senate Armed Services Committee and is outranked in continuous Senate service by only two members. At 60, he is seeking his fifth term.

Republican Lineup

Lineup in the Republican senatorial primary are John Marshall Butler, 53, Baltimore attorney, and D. John Markey, 67, retired Army brigadier general of Walkersville, Md.

GOP organization support is said to have been thrown to Butler, leaving Markey to rely on the individual vote-getting ability he showed in 1946, when he lost by 1500 ballots to Herbert R. O'Conor (D., Md.).

Senator O'Conor has come out for Tydings. He has been officially neutral to date in the Lane-Mahoney race. A rumor has run through Baltimore for some time that O'Conor inclines to Mahoney—the two have long been friends and O'Conor put him on the racing commission—but Lane people deny it and O'Conor would not comment.

One advantage generally credited to Governor Lane in his fight with Mahoney is the electoral-vote method of deciding the primary winner, a system that also applies to the senatorial race.

77 of 152 Electoral Votes

The contests are not decided by popular vote, but by 77 of the 152 electoral votes. Forty-two of them are in Baltimore City (7 from each of 6 legislative districts) and 110 are in the 23 counties.

Observers say Lane's strength is in the majority of the counties with a close contest probable in Baltimore. His backers predict a clean sweep. Some on the sidelines say it would even be possible for Mahoney to win a popular majority and lose the nomination, a result that would delight the Republicans.

Mahoney and Lane have torn into each other on the State sales tax, enacted by the Lane administration, and on every other element of State policy, but their real issue seems to be each other. Mahoney says Lane breaks promises; Lane says Mahoney makes phoney promises; Mahoney says Lane is unfit to hold office; Lane's campaign manager, Robert B. Ennis, calls Mahoney a "gossip mongering old fishwife."

Some say the two men have been pulling their punches so far.

Headquarters Activity

Lane's headquarters in Baltimore's Emerson Hotel is quiet, businesslike, a mite mysterious. It'll bustle this week.

Mahoney's headquarters in the Lord Baltimore Hotel is noisy, a bit disorderly, and all-out hospitable.

In the Congressional primaries special interest centers on the Sixth District, running west from Washington to the tip of Maryland; the Third and Fourth, where women are in the fight, and the Second, where to the victor go the doubtful spoils of having to meet Brig. Gen. James P. S. Devereux, hero of Wake Island, in the general election.

Republican Devereux, 47, is unopposed in the primary, just like the five other GOP Congressional candidates, including two now in office, Representatives J. Glenn Beall of the Sixth (Western Maryland) District, and Edward T. Miller of the First (Eastern Shore) District.

District by district, and in reverse numerical order, here's the picture:

Sixth District: Russell P. Hartle, 61, of Hagerstown, retired major general who served 32 years in the army, and W. Prescott Allen, 45, of Bethesda, publisher of the weekly Bethesda-Chevy Chase Tribune, are seeking the Democratic nomination to run in November against Rep. Beall, who at 56 is seeking his 5th term.

Fifth District: Representative Lansdale G. Sasscer (D., Md.) is dean of the Maryland House delegation, and the only one of the four Democrats who has no primary opposition. He is 56, lives in Upper Marlboro, and is seeking his seventh term. His opponent in November will be Thomas S. Carr, 38, Annapolis radio station executive.

Fallon vs. Whitehurst

Fourth District: (Baltimore) Representative George H. Fallon (D., Md.) and Mrs. Sara A. Whitehurst, former president of the General Federation of Women's clubs, are the candidates in what many observers feel will be the closest of all the Democratic Congressional primary races. Fallon is allied with the Mahoney forces; Mrs. Whitehurst is heading up the women's division of the Lane campaign organization. She is Democratic National committeewoman and Lane is Democratic National Committeeman from Maryland. The winner will meet James W. Miller, 55, the Republican candidate, in November. Fallon, 48, is seeking his third term in the House. He beat Miller last time by some 17,000 votes.

Third District: Mrs. Lililan L. Klecka, 49, is running against Representative Edward A. Garmatz (D., Md.) in the home District of Baltimore's politically powerful Mayor Thomas D'Alesandro, predecesor of Garmatz in the House. Garmatz, 47, is seeking his 2d full term. The Republican candidate is Louis R. Milie, Baltimore attorney, who on the day before the primary will be 25, the minimum age for service in the House.

Three-Way Contest

Second District: Representative William P. Bolton (D., Md.) of Towson, a one-term member of the House, has two opponents for the Democratic nomination. The main fight is being waged by Williams Boucher, 3d, 31, who is in the tobacco business with his family. Boucher hit the political trail via offices with the American Veterans Committee — (he was chairman of the Baltimore AVC—and the Maryland Americans for Democratic Action, of which he is chairman. The second opponent is John B. Kennedy, Baltimore construction business man. The winner meets General Devereux in the general election.

First District: State Senator Thomas F. Johnson, 41, of Snow Hill, and Herman Y. Brownhall, 54, of Chestertown, are seeking the Democratic nomination to run against Representative Miller, 55, who is seeking his 3d term.

Most forecasters, looking at both primary and general elections, think the chances favor return to office of most if not all of the incumbent Congressmen.

In the Republican camp, Miss Helen Elizabeth Brown, 50, Baltimore attorney, and William A. Gunter, 58, Cumberland attorney, are seeking the nomination to run against Attorney General Hall Hammond, seeking re-election on the Lane ticket.

Then there are three more candidates in the second division of the Democratic governorship primary: Herbert William Larrabee, 50, retired Navy lieutenant, of Glen Burnie, and Harry Kemper, 46, East Baltimore grocer, both of whom emphasize a veterans' bonus as a campaign issue; and Stephen B. Petticord, 52, Baltimore electrician who has been a perennial candidate for political office.

Larrabee came up recently with the prediction that unless he is nominated, a Republican will become Governor in November.

D. C. May Seek Record $150 Million Budget

Commissioners and budget officers about a 23-million-dollar pruning job to do before sending the budget to Congress early next year.

This is arrived at in this way:

The city is currently operating on a budget of about 120 million dollars—$118,049,256 in the appropriation bill and another 2 million in supplemental bills. A surplus of $6,800,000 is expected at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1951.

No New Taxes Seen

Budget Officer Fowler has declared that no new taxes or changes in the rates of existing levies are under consideration.

On this basis, then, the city expects to have about $127,000,000 for the upcoming fiscal year—23 million less than department heads are expected to request. Since the city must send up a balanced budget to Congress, the cutting becomes inevitable.

A trimming job of this size is not unknown to the District officials. They slashed 44 million off the record-breaking request of fiscal 1949 and 41 million from fiscal 1948. Last year, about 20 million was trimmed from the departmental requests.

The project would be eased if the country moves closer to wartime footing and materials shortages put construction projects into the deep-freeze again.

Revenues Would Dip

On the other hand, however, budget officials point out that the trimming would be harder if this point is reached since revenues would decline. If controls are reinstituted, officials anticipate a serious drop in sales, gasoline and auto excise tax revenues.

In their requests, many department heads are expected to seek funds for a start on war-frozen construction and on postwar needs. These include:

Extension of city streets to meet the new Federal highway from Baltimore; the East Capitol st. bridge; sewage treatment plant enlargement; sewerage expansion in the Ingraham and 5th sts. nw. section; further school building; a new operating suite for Gallinger Hospital; additional building at the Children's Center in Laurel, Md.; improvement of the Home for the Aged and Infirm at Blue Plains and expansion of Glenn Dale Sanitorium for treatment of tuberculars.

The record of budget cuts in the past seven years has been:

Fiscal Year	Department Estimates	Actual Appropriation
1945	$70,615,265	$69,943,731
1946	68,613,689	65,635,660
1947	86,800,596	76,755,009
1948	136,108,913	93,504,737
1949	143,866,908	99,729,482
1950	110,188,548	102,754,447
1951	138,984,400	118,049,256

Injury Report Lists Snakes, Burns, Falls

Two children of different families were bitten by a poisonous snake last week and admitted to Providence Hospital for treatment, the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service reported..

These were among the 130 hospitalized injuries reported for the period.

They include 53 falls, 8 burns, 9 accidental poisonings, 6 foreign bodies, 36 cuts and 18 unclassified.

In addition, four deaths resulted from three falls and one fatal burn at home.

The home injuries covered a wide range.

A 17-year-old boy was bitten on the toe by a rat.

Three small boys were admitted to Episcopal Hospital and may lose their eyes from pieces of broken glass, a sling slot and a stone with which they were playing.

As a result of falling on a barbed wire fence, a little girl incurred osteomyletis of the leg.

A 3-year-old boy suffered a mashed foot and three broken toes when a 75-pound refrigerator door which was being repaired fell on the foot.

A floor lamp fell on a 5-year-old girl's head, leaving a deep scalp laceration and possible concussion.

The ancient trap of playing with matches left a little boy with third-degree burns on his legs from knee to ankle.

A pressure cooker exploded, giving second-degree burns to an adult.

Poisonings resulted when children ate lye crystals, cleaning fluid, turpentine, rat poison, fingernail polish, and disinfectants; two small brothers ate codeine pills.

Driver Nabbed In Wild Chase For Furniture

A police motorcycle chased a midget automobile in northeast Washington early yesterday, with allegedly stolen furnitutre falling from the little car at two intersections.

Charged with housebreaking—and on three traffic counts—was 22-year-old James Edward Wilson, of 57 Bryant st. nw.

About 4:15 a. m. yesterday, police received a call from the Ansonia Furniture Co., 501 H st. ne. Pvt. T. F. Lundregan, a motorcyclist for the traffic division, spotted a midget auto parked in back of the store.

Lundregan said the auto took off and he followed. At 5th and G sts. se., said the policeman, two "gossip benches" flew from the auto. At 4th and K sts., Lundregan continued, the auto struck the curb and a rocking chair fell out.

It was at this intersection that Lundregan arrested the driver, identified as Wilson.

Police said the two benches, the rocking chair, several table lamps and men's clothing—valued at $118—were reported stolen.

In Municipal Court, one judge held Wilson for the grand jury on the housebreaking charge. Another sentenced him to $40 or 40 days on a charge of unreasonable speed, $10 or 10 days on a charge of passing a stop sign and $10 or 10 days for going the wrong way on a one-way street.

Fairfax Girls Win Awards At 4-H Show

WARRENTON, Va., Sept. 9.—With more than 160 entries competing 4-H Club boys and girls from ten northern Virginia counties took part in the fifth annual Northern Virginia 4-H Dairy Show held at the Warrenton Horse Show grounds here today.

A drizzling rain failed to dampen the spirits of the youngsters as they showed their animals, in what Prof. P. M. Reaves of Virginia Polytechnic Institute, a judge of the show with James N. Leckie, also of V. P. I., termed one of the top shows in the State.

Two 11-year-old Fairfax County girls won first-place awards. They were Mary Alice Cissel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Cissel of Fairfax, who won the fitting award, and Ginger Blair, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. S. Blair of Herndon, showmanship winner.

Herbert Wilson, jr., of Catlett, Va., won the senior fitting championship and Elizabeth Ann James, of Madison, Va., won the senior showmanship.

D. C. Gets $4000 to Prepare Plans for New Police Buildings

The District Commissioners have received $4000 to prepare plans for a new station house in the First Precinct and a new building to house the Women's Bureau, Raymond M. Foley, administrator of the Housing and Home Finance Agency, announced yesterday.

The buildings will cost an estimated $711,000, agency officials said. The sum has not yet been appropriated.

The station house would have a 20-cell lockup, squad room and offices. The Women's Bureau would have 11 single rooms, dining room, kitchen and isolation rooms.

Location of the proposed buildings has not been decided. At present the Women's Bureau is at 1224 5th st nw. The First Precinct station house has been in Police Headquarters, 300 Indiana ave. nw., since September, 1947.

Before that the station house was at 425 New Jersey ave. nw. Last fall Police Superintendent Robert J. Barrett asked the Commissioners to raze this building and hold the land "until it can be determined if it is possible to use it for the Women's Bureau."

Capt. Rhoda Milliken, in charge of the Women's Bureau, said yesterday her bureau had asked for a new building.

ROTC to Admit 34,000 Additional Upper Classmen

The Army yesterday announced an increase of 34,000 in the number of juniors and seniors at universities and colleges who may take reserve officer training during the school year starting this fall. This raises the total from 120,500 to 154,500.

In addition, the Army announced that seniors who are World War II veterans but who have not had previous ROTC training, may be enrolled in the second year advanced course of reserve officer training.

Successful candidates will be eligible for reserve second lieutenants' commissions.

Choice In Fairfax

The dual choice to be presented to Fairfax County voters in the November referendum on a change of government seems to us eminently fair and sensible. The form of ballot approved by County Circuit Court Judge Paul E. Brown will ask first whether the county should change its form of government and, second, whether, in case a change is approved, it should take the county executive form or the county manager form. All who vote on the first question, including those who vote against any change at all, may vote on the second question. This is patently just and proper, since opponents no less than proponents of change will be obliged to live under the new system if a majority decides to abandon the old.

There has been sharp division of opinion among Fairfax County residents as to the relative merits of the county manager and the county executive forms of government. The latter is favored in the careful, lucid and persuasive report submitted to the Board of Supervisors by the 21-member commission appointed to study the problem. We think that a great deal of credit is due this commission and, in particular, the chairman of its executive committee, Mr. David Lawrence. It seems clear that the commission is correct in the view that a more modern form of government is needed to enable Fairfax County to cope with the problems arising out of the rapid growth of its population. There will be time between now and November to debate the nature of the change to be made. We hope, however, that the need for change will not be obscured by controversy on this score.

Radio Purge

More and more the techniques of the Communists are being embraced by those who profess to be fighting communism. Self-appointed policemen of Americanism tend increasingly to insist upon a rigid, stereotyped conformity, striving to suppress as disloyal any opinions that deviate a hairbreadth from their own. If they have their way, they will destroy the diversity that is the genius of American life. They aim, like the commissars of Moscow, to silence dissent and to dictate the forms and observances of what they consider patriotism.

They have enjoyed a rather frightening success of late in the entertainment industry. Puffed up over their success in destroying the careers of Paul Draper and Larry Adler, a group of them has now undertaken a systematic purge of radio. The index for its purge seems to be a book called Red Channels, purporting to show Communist infiltration in the broadcasting business; it amounts actually, of course, to nothing more than a listing of the group's personal dislikes and has about as much validity as Elizabeth Dilling's silly Red Network of some years ago. Nevertheless it has already scored a shoddy triumph in depriving the television actress, Jean Muir, of her leading role in the program known as "The Aldrich Family." This is a triumph closely akin to that of the Russians in disciplining the composer, Shostakovich, and in silencing every voice that does not faithfully follow the Communist Party line.

Whatever Miss Muir's political opinions and associations may be, the plain fact is that she has been made the victim of a form of organized thuggery. Her name was listed in Red Channels. As a result, the sponsor of her program, General Foods, received a series of telephoned protests, deliberately mobilized no doubt. And the sponsor, desiring understandably to avoid offense to any potential customer, at once canceled her contract on the ground that she had become "a controversial personality." No attempt has been made to find out if there was any warrant for the listing of Miss Muir in Red Channels, although she has indignantly denied any Communist sympathies. At present there is no tribunal to which she can turn for a hearing or for vindication, but alarmed representatives of the radio and television industry are considering formation of a body to investigate such complaints against performers. We hope their efforts will succeed.

There is no nicer name for what was done in Miss Muir's case than blackmail. Advertisers being naturally sensitive to "controversial personalities" are generally subject to this kind of pressure. Unless repudiated by a concerted effort, it can be repeated in the case of any entertainer whose opinions the blackmailers dislike. But it represents an intrusion into American life of methods that have hitherto been considered distinctively communistic. They are methods that are unlikely to contribute to the defeat of communism. They can result only in bitter disunity and a destruction of American values.

Swimming Pools

The completion of the first full year of nonsegregated swimming at the six Washington pools controlled by the Interior Department affords an appropriate opportunity for sober reexamination of what has been an overheated community issue. Total attendance at the six pools during the summer months of 1950 was 235,533; of this number, about 90,000 swimmers were colored and about 146,000 were white. No disturbance or unhappy incident of any kind occurred in the course of the season.

The orderliness of the program is attributable in large part, of course, to the care and intelligence with which it was administered by National Capital Parks. Adequate police protection was provided, and the police officers assigned to this duty were trained specifically to deal with its problems; in this connection the Metropolitan Police, who took extraordinary care to see that order was maintained in the areas around the pools, deserve a share of the credit. The record demonstrates conclusively that nonsegregated swimming can be handled safely and harmoniously in Washington provided the leadership is sympathetic and sensible. Trouble is likely to arise only if, as was the case in 1949, some organized group attempts to foment it.

The one defect in the record is that attendance at the six pools was 28 percent lower than during the previous summer. In some slight measure this may be ascribed to the mildness of the weather. In considerable part, no doubt, it was due to fear that there might be a repetition of the disorder that occurred at the Anacostia pool in June, 1949; this is a fear which the experience of the past season ought to dispel. In part, too, the decreased use of the pools reflects a continuing opposition among some members of the community to nonsegregated swimming; time and education and the gradual, accelerating change in the pattern of Washington's race relations will erase this opposition.

Even with diminished attendance, the National Capital Parks pools were so congested as to discourage use of them; so were the pools operated by the District Recreation Department. Additional pools are urgently required. Construction of them in the neighborhoods where they are most needed would serve to make swimming more attractive by diminishing congestion and increasing accessibility; it would thus also reduce the danger of friction. Funds to build new pools have been sought by both National Capital Parks and the Recreation Department but have been denied presumably because of fear that they would create new trouble spots. That fear should no longer stand in the way of expansion.

The lesson of the summer's experience, in our judgment, is that nonsegregated swimming is here to stay; that it can be conducted safely and harmoniously under level-headed leadership; and that along these lines increased swimming facilities should be made available for use next summer. The experience is a credit to the community's good sense. It is a credit especially to the church and civic groups which worked to prevent trouble and to prepare the community for orderly acceptance of the new practice. The outcome is all the more gratifying to The Washington Post because last spring we shared the widespread fear that the community was not yet ready to accept nonsegregated swimming without a recurrence of violence.

Social Security

The liberalized Social Security Act signed last week by President Truman provides for immediate increases in payments to about three million aged persons, widows and orphans. A retired worker, for example, who was entitled to a payment of $15 a month under the old law will get $30. If his monthly check amounted to $46—the maximum payment heretofore made to an individual—he will receive $68.50. Wives of retired workers will receive correspondingly larger benefits and survivors' benefits payable to widows and children will also be increased.

According to official estimates, about 8 percent of the more than two million old people now drawing insurance benefits are partly dependent on relief payments. Some of these people will in future be able to dispense with this supplementary aid. Moreover, a large number of the aged who heretofore were unable to qualify for insurance will become eligible for monthly payments under the more liberal provisions of the new law. As a result, the number of old people on relief rolls will gradually decline. And, even more important, an increasing number of retired workers will have the satisfaction of knowing that their insurance benefits are paid as a matter of right and are not handouts.

The new law not only increases the benefits of those who have already reached retirement age, but it brings into the system about 7½ million persons, including the self-employed, domestic servants and farm workers, some of whom will be eligible for benefits in 1952. Voluntary coverage is also available for about two million employes of State and local governments and nonprofit institutions. Insurance payments to workers retiring after mid-1952, will be even more liberal than the new scale of benefits applicable to those now drawing benefits. Retired workers will also be permitted to earn up to $50 a month in covered employment without forfeiture of retirement payments. Under the old law, if a retired worker earned $15 or more in covered employment, he lost his own benefits and the benefits payable to his dependents were suspended. Modification of this income limitation will encourage able-bodied retired workers to engage in productive employment, thereby reducing the need for old-age assistance grants. At the same time, the addition of older people to the working force will help to relieve labor shortages that threaten to slow down the defense program.

Many workers are still excluded from the protection afforded by the old-age insurance system. There is also urgent need of insurance against loss of wages through temporary or permanent disability. Nevertheless, the revisionist plan is a long step toward that universal coverage which should be the ultimate goal of the old-age-and-survivors insurance system. Oscar Ewing, Federal Security Administrator, regards the system as "one of the greatest bulwarks possessed by our economy and the free enterprise system." We agree with him and for that reason conclude that the more comprehensive the system becomes, the greater the protection afforded against subversive movements inimical to the system of free enterprise.

Defenders Of Freedom

The departure of sons, brothers, husbands and sweethearts for the battlefields or military training centers has brought the war in Korea very close to the American people. All over the land men and women are deeply conscious of the sacrifice that is involved. The scene that was enacted on the steps of the District Building last Wednesday, when the first contingent of local draftees called up during the Korean war was given an appropriate send-off, is being repeated in many other cities. Americans are responding to the call of their country with deep regret that war is again raging but also with grim determination to meet the threat of aggressive communism. Much as they have hoped and prayed for peace in the years since the end of World War II, they are not willing to sell freedom for peace.

As these men shoulder their great burden, they have the satisfaction of knowing that they are taking up arms in as fine a cause as men ever fought for. What is at stake is nothing less than survival of the free world. Mr. Malcolm MacDonald, British High Commissioner for Southeast Asia, nicely summed up the objectives of the Korean war recently when he addressed the British troops sailing to Korea from Hongkong. Here is the gist of what he said:

> The Korean war is part of Russian communism's attempt to conquer the world. They want to make us all slaves to Moscow.
> Every time you hit the North Koreans you will be striking a blow for freedom. In Korea you will be fighting just as if you were defending your beloved homeland and its people. You will fight there as if you were fighting in the fields of France or on the beaches of Britain.
> The men responding to this call will have the additional satisfaction of knowing that they are fighting with the support of 54 nations behind them. It is primarily a United Nations cause. Defense of our own way of life has become inextricably bound up with the defeat of aggression against other countries adhering to U. N. principles. If we look at the forest rather than the trees, the present fighting is one of the most significant episodes in the long struggle of mankind for a world of law and order. It is a cause that commands the best efforts of free men and women the world over whether they are in uniform or working on the home front.

Getting Ready

In a recent address to members of the National Sales Executive Club, Secretary of Commerce Sawyer said that his department is setting up a new agency to handle most allocations and priorities. According to reports other departments, Labor, Interior, and Agriculture, and the Interstate Commerce Commission will be responsible for administering controls over manpower, electricity, farm supplies, and transportation. Some kind of supervisory agency will undoubtedly be essential to settle disputes between these agencies and other claimants for scarce supplies. Mr. Sawyer says that it will take the form of a requirement committee on which other Government departments will be represented. Presumably this committee will clear requests for scarce materials.

As the controlled area expands, we do not believe that an interagency group of this sort will be able to coordinate effectively the activities of the various agencies and departments responsible for the defense program. A single agency divorced from competing claimants, with authority concentrated in its head, will, in our opinion, be necessary to cut red tape and evolve a unified policy that can be carried out with dispatch, in disregard of opposition from special interest groups, inside and outside the Government. World War II demonstrated the need for a one-man mobilization director, and the scope of the defense program indicates that there will soon be need of a defense mobilizer with comparable responsibility for supervising and directing multifarious controls.

The President has refused to confirm reports that W. Stuart Symington, head of the Government's mobilization planning agency, would be selected for this exacting assignment. But he did not exclude the possibility. If Mr. Symington is slated for this position, we hope the President will make it known at once. For if he is to do a good administrative job, Mr. Symington will require time to acquaint himself with the duties and problems of his difficult and responsible office.

Letters To The Editor

Schoeppel's Charges

This is the Age of the Good Intention or, more accurately, perhaps, the Era of Enlightened Accusation, in which is being spun out the drama entitled "Fixing the Administration." The three leading authors of this drama have not yet found it necessary to call in the rewrite men, the story treatment experts, to dress up their yarn and give it added punch. As each author has fallen by the wayside, either with a prison sentence or because of the outraged opinion of decent citizens, a new author, imbued with holy zeal, has taken his place. There seems to be a compulsion for accusation. First it was J. Parnell Thomas, then J. R. McCarthy. Now it is Senator Andrew Schoeppel of Kansas.

The protagonists of this drama are of stellar rank, for the greater part, and have been both in and out of public office. Some have been villains—in at least one instance this having been decided by the law of the land—but all have been leading men. Among these distinguished actors have been Dr. Owen Lattimore and the Hon. Dean G. Acheson and now dramatist Schoeppel who is long on dramatic implication and, seemingly, painfully short on law—has added the names of the Honorables Oscar L. Chapman, Secretary of the Interior; Ernest Gruening, Governor of Alaska, and E. L. "Bob" Bartlett, Alaska's able Delegate in Congress. Presumably, in view of the tenor of his dialogue, playwright Schoeppel intends to place the Governor of Hawaii and its Delegate in Congress, the Hon. Joseph R. Farrington, in the same production, although their names had not been announced as being in the cast at the time this communication was penned.

Because Mr. Chapman has been handed the leading role in the Schoeppel sequences of the drama, it is sequitur in the playwright's eyes that the other new members of the cast must be of similar aptitude in the interpretations, the intent and the dramatic impishness of their roles. What is it that the star, Mr. Chapman, has done? And what grime has fallen from his purportedly dirty hands onto the shoulders of his fellow actors?

If the people of this Nation, and their duly elected and appointed representatives, would try to be for something for a change, instead of spending so much of their time, their effort and the taxpayers' money being against countless little things having political "implications," we might regain much of the respect which we have lost in the world's eyes. We might also make ourselves a strong and a united people, which the far-from-divine-efflatus of the self-styled dramatists on Capitol Hill has done, and is doing, so much to dissipate.

Truman And The Marines

Most of us Marines are amused and tolerant with Mr. Truman's letter about the Marines, because we know we're pretty uppity, and deserve a smack down now and then.

Funny thing is that we could use this little tempest for fun at a time when we certainly need something to smile about, and here we are making a tremendous fuss over it.

Then there's a happy angle, too. The Republicans have got themselves an issue. It's just a little bitty issue and it won't last but three days, but by golly they've got an issue!

Political Apathy

After half a day of tramping up and down steps and ringing doorbells in an attempt to interest Prince Georges County residents in a political campaign, I came home heartsick. Heartsick over the apathy of those who have the right to vote and don't. Knocking on the doors of apartments in one of the developments in the Hyattsville area, I discovered that out of the first 20 families interviewed, not one was registered. The same situation was true of a particular street of homes (residences that had been erected from two to five years ago, ample time in which to register). Out of a total of 15 homes with approximately 35 potential voters, five of these people were found to be registered.

Naturally, as a campaigner for one of the candidates running in the primaries, I am interested in having voters cast their ballot in her favor. But, more important, as an American citizen who believes in representative form of government, I am also interested in seeing people exercise their precious franchise, regardless of their choice. When people fail to register to vote they have no right to complain about poor county government. They are in no position to correct the evil. Their disregard for the power of the ballot makes them politically impotent.

It is unfortunate that those striving for good government are more likely to be defeated by apathy than reaction.

Ballpark Concessionaires

I have read somewhere, perhaps in your paper, that some of the baseball clubowners have been grousing about a drop in attendance figures, and blame it upon the fact that many of their former customers have got into the habit of watching the games by television.

This does not at all surprise me. But it may surprise the clubowners to be told that their rather primitive methods of dealing with the public are also responsible. For one thing they ought to give more attention to practices of their concessionaires, some of whom surpass in downright rapacity the worst of the night club operators.

Let me give an example: Not long ago I took an acquaintance who was visiting me in Washington, to a game at Griffith Stadium. On our way up the ramp we purchased (at a price representing approximately 2000 percent of the cost of production) a pair of score cards. When we opened them we discovered that they were partly filled out by innings. Not only that but about half the identification numbers given for the players were inaccurate or out of date. Obviously they had been printed for some earlier series with the same club—perhaps even a series in some previous season—and had been retrieved from the litter swept up from the stands. Perhaps they had been sold a half dozen times before they were sold to us. Perhaps they will be sold again next year, for I regret to say that as soon as we discovered them to be worthless and misleading we threw them away.

This is a minor irritation no doubt; it is also an unnecessary one. It is one that does not have to be endured if one watches the game from a barroom stool or from one's own living-room.

Hager Report

In recommending the merger of the District's white and Negro teachers colleges, President Walter E. Hager of Wilson Teachers College proposed a "logical, eminently desirable and a statesmanlike step"—and more, he was giving expression to his characteristic courage and conscientiousness as an educator of educators. Dr. Hager's proposal is good for the community and good for our future teachers who will have the solemn task of transmitting to future generations the vital meaning of our democratic heritage.

President Hager does not stand alone in urging the strengthening of our democratic practices in higher education. In the latter part of last year a national conference of educators was held in Chicago under the auspices of the American Council on Education and the Anti-defamation League of B'nai B'rith. The central theme of this meeting was "Discriminations in College Admissions." This conference was one response to the report of the President's Commission on Higher Education, which condemned discriminatory practices and called for programs to equalize and expand individual opportunities for education. In April of this year a regional conference of educators from institutions of higher education from the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia and Delaware, met in Washington, D. C. Twenty-eight institutions were represented and the body as a whole went on record opposing racial and religious discrimination in admission practices and administrative policies in higher education. Dr. Walter E. Hager served as chairman for this conference.

All who have seriously studied America's schools are agreed there is a desperate need for improving our educational plant and personnel. The bills now pending in Congress for Federal aid are one answer. Individual communities like Arlington, which was honored for its efforts in a March of Time short, "The Fight for Better Schools," and citizens at large are rising up to demand that all available resources—governmental, physical and human, be mobilized in the most economical and efficient way to provide for the increased numbers of children the kind of education they deserve in this richest and freest land in the world.

Every consideration of democracy and sound education applies with greater force in the Nation's Capital, on which the eyes of our friends and foes all over the world are focused. Our armed forces are giving testimony in blood and tears that Americans of different colors and creeds can work together for democratic goals. In many other areas of American life great progress is being made toward good human relations. Education is a key sector in American life—and Washingtonians now have in President Hager's proposal a realistic opportunity to make their contribution to a more perfect democracy. Now is the time for civic-minded citizens of good will to give their active support to the merger of the District's teachers colleges.

H. T.'s Policy On China

By Mark Sullivan

No Help For Chiang

SOUTH KOREA is a tiny country, some 20 million people. To prevent subjection of it to communism we are using the utmost strength we have available and are mobilizing more.

Yet South Korea is only a tiny piece of Asia. And up to two years ago an immense part of Asia, China with some 400 million people, was under attempt at subjection to communism—an attempt coming from the same source and in other respects largely identical with the present attempt in South Korea. Against that attempt at communizing China the policy of the Truman Administration did not exert resistance. That policy raises a question, expressible in three letters but monumental in its relation to present disaster, "Why?"

An answer made at the time was that we could not afford to exert ourselves in resisting the communizing of China, that our resources did not permit. That answer was plausible, to a considerable degree it had merit. We had begun in 1946 to lay out billions to enable countries of Western Europe to resist communism there, the aid that became known as the "Marshall plan." The theory was that our resources were not enough to resist communism in both Europe and China, and that of the two it was more immediately important to resist in Europe. The countries in Western Europe that we were defending composed, next to the United States itself, the area of the world's greatest productive capacity and economic strength. Fall of them to Russian communism could be directly fatal.

YET THE ANSWER that we had not the resources to resist communizing of China's 400 millions becomes a tragic irony when today we are pouring out billions without stint to resist the communizing of South Korea's 20 million people. The irony is increased by what was apparent in advance, that once Russian Communism should take over China it would attempt to take over the rest of Eastern and Southeastern Asia, including Korea.

When the overcoming of China by Communism was under way, there was an outpouring of prophecy and warning about the consequences. A typical one came from a military source, Maj. Gen. Clair Chennault (retired) who had been head of our air forces in China during World War II. Writing about the strategy of the Russian Communist leaders he said: "The domination of China is one of [the] strategical essentials necessary . . . before they can feel safe in making war on the world." In a book entitled China, the Land and the People, Gerald F. Winfield wrote in 1948: "Our stake in Asia has now become a matter of the survival of our democracy . . . even our very existence as a free people." A report of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs said that success by the Communists in taking over China would result in "one Soviet-dominated world."

NOW THAT THE consequences have begun, with the Communist aggression in South Korea, there is inevitable questioning about the relation of the Truman Administration to the Communist overcoming of China when it was under way. The Republicans announce that the actions and policies of the Administration will be "reviewed completely." In such a review there is one condition, commonly overlooked, but having great weight.

At the time the Communist conquest of China was under way, there was just one organized opposition to it. This was the Nationalist government of China under Chiang Kai-shek. Either Chiang Kai-shek would resist successfully, or the Communists would triumph; and whichever the outcome it would be the final answer. In simple common sense the interest of the United States lay in giving Chiang Kai-shek every support we could. This the Truman Administration conspicuously did not do. That we should not give Chiang Kai-shek large military and economic support was understandable, because of what we were committed to giving Western Europe. But we did not give him even moral or political support, on the contrary we conspicuously withheld them. As an example we at one point publicly urged Chiang Kai-shek to take the Communists into a coalition government. This, and other actions and attitudes of the Truman Administration caused Chiang Kai-shek to lose "face" with the Chinese people. And that loss of face was a major cause of his defeat.

In explanation of the Truman Administration's attitude toward Chiang Kai-shek, it was said that his government was weak and inefficient. A frequent ward used about him was "reactionary." As if that, whether justified or not, should have weight, considering the stake we had. Among the mistakes and worse of the Truman Administration about China, a glaring one was lack of ordinary common sense.

Matter of Fact

How the Defense Budget Swelled

By Stewart Alsop

HOW MUCH are we really going to spend for defense? For weeks now, the National Security Council has been wrestling with this life-and-death issue. Much of the spadework has been done by Ambassador-at-Large Philip Jessup and Air Force Secretary Thomas Finletter, who have been meeting almost daily with the other deputies of the NSC. And as every week has passed since the attack on Korea, the estimates of defense spending have increased.

At first it was thought that 18 to 20 billion dollars would suffice. This was quickly upped to the 25-billion-dollar level incorporated in President Truman's request to Congress. From this level the estimates climbed to 27 billion dollars, then to 30 billion dollars. And it now appears likely that the total of defense spending for the next fiscal year may climb, in authorization requests, well over 40 billion dollars and perhaps as high as 50 billion dollars.

What has happened, of course, is very simple. Gradually, the real facts of our situation have been faced—that general war in the near future has become, if not probable, exceedingly possible; and that for the first time in our history we could quite conceivably lose a war. And facing these facts has in turn forced the planners to think, not about what we can comfortably afford, but about what we really need.

There is now beginning to be fairly general agreement on what we really need. These needs may be itemized as follows:

ARMY: Eighteen to 20 divisions. It was at first intended to hold the Army to 14 divisions. But as the weeks since the Korea attack have passed, the Europeans have been begging more and more urgently for a real American commitment on the continent—at least six divisions—with an American supreme commander for the joint Atlantic Pact forces. No official decision has been taken, but this commitment will in the end almost certainly be made, simply because otherwise the Atlantic alliance will disintegrate. This commitment will require a total American standing Army of at least 18 divisions, and perhaps 20.

AIR FORCE: Ninety to 105 groups. Because of all the past emphasis on a 70-group Air Force, it has been generally assumed that the 69-group Air Force currently authorized meets requirements. This is not the case. The fact is that the 70-group program has been rendered obsolete by events.

For one thing, the Soviets began stockpiling atomic bombs much sooner than anticipated. For another thing, Soviet air defenses, crude when the Finletter report was written in 1947, are now certainly exceedingly formidable. It was to take care of just such unforeseen developments that the report called for a thorough review of the whole air program in January, 1950.

While "economy" ruled the day, such a review would have been futile. It has now been undertaken. The result has been a virtually unanimous agreement that minimum security demands at least a 90-group Air Force, and perhaps an Air Force of more than 100 groups.

NAVY: About double the strength of the "economy" Navy. The new Navy would be built around 10 and perhaps 12 heavy aircraft carriers and a larger number of light carriers, and with both the Marines and the antisubmarine defenses decisively strengthened.

NO FINAL ESTIMATES have been made of what increases in this order would cost. But preliminary estimates are that this kind of American defense force could be maintained, once it was created, at a level of about 30 billion dollars annually, at present prices. Roughly, the costs come to about 12 billion dollars to maintain an 18-division Army, 10.5 billion dollars to maintain an Air Force of just under 100 groups, and about eight billion dollars for the strengthened Navy.

The trouble is that these new forces must first be created—and created with almost frantic haste. If the orderly increase in strength advocated by James Forrestal had been undertaken, this could have been done without very great strain. But because of the deep cutbacks under the "economy" program, the process of creating new strength will be fantastically expensive. This is the basic reason why estimates of the initial costs have now soared above 40 billion dollars.

To this huge figure must be added five to six billion dollars for European rearmament, and one to two billion dollars for a greatly expanded effort in the atomic and guided missiles field. Thus what is immediately in prospect is a defense effort virtually on a wartime scale, for two or three years. Provided there is no general war, this would be followed by an indefinite period during which 10 to 15 percent of the gross national product would be devoted to defense.

Our Political Economy

How Can We Get War Workers?

By Ysabel Rennie

THE UNITED STATES is facing a serious manpower crisis. With a record 62 million persons at work, and very little unemployment, we have to find millions of men for the armed forces and war industries. How can we do it?

In 1940 the job was easy. Between April of that year and April, 1944, we added 19 million persons to the labor force, 7 million of them from the ranks of the unemployed. We were the only warring nation whose civilian labor force rose during the war.

Today's mobilization finds us in a tight labor market. If we are to draft men for the armed services, we must somehow replace them. This means drawing new workers into the labor force, and it also means a drastic reshuffle of manpower from nonessential to war industries.

The labor force, under pressure, is elastic. During the last war we drew millions into the labor force who are not normally there. The largest reservoir, some two-fifths of all net additions, was women over 24. Almost as large was the age group 14-24, of both sexes, many of whom left school to take war jobs. There are other reserves, too; the elderly; those working part-time who are willing to take on full-time jobs.

But just as important as the net additions is the effective use of those at work. By higher wages, by work orders, by draft deferments, it is possible to shift men and women from nonessential to priority occupations. We did not do as well in the last war as we should have. But potentially, at least, there are manpower reserves in agriculture, construction, the trades, the service industries and among the dwindling number of domestic workers.

POTENTIAL RESERVES can be hard to tap. Today we face problems we did not face in 1940, and most of them arise from the changing composition of our population.

Young people are the core of a mobilization effort. Wars are fought by those in their teens and early twenties. Yet today's 18-year-olds were born in 1932, when our birth rate touched bottom; and for the next six or seven years our 18-year-olds will be the small baby crop of the depressed 1930s.

Women are the great potential source of war workers. Here, too, we are going to run into difficulties. Experience shows that wives and mothers are far less likely to enter the labor force than single women.

A census survey last year showed that of those over 14, 67 percent were now married. In 1940 the proportion was 60 percent, and a half century ago it was only 53 percent.

When husbands are drafted, childless wives will go to work. However, women with preschool children are all but unemployable. Thanks to the baby crops of the last few years, a third of all married couples—nearly 12 million—have children under 6.

For the future it will be harder, not easier, to find available women workers. Take the case of young women 20 to 24. In 1940 nearly half of them were single; today all but 31 percent are married.

EVERYTHING, in short, points to a hard job of manpower mobilization. We have no reservoir of unemployed. Those coming into the draft age are a relatively smaller group than they have been. Most women are married, and a very large share of these—a third, in fact—have small children to care for. So where do we get the manpower?

Direct controls are politically unpalatable, particularly at the present stage of mobilization. Economic pressure, though, is a great persuader.

In the last war the countries which were stingiest with their family allotments for servicemen did the best job of getting women into the labor force. Britain was by far the least generous, and mobilized the most women. Germany was the most generous, and not only did she fail to get women to work, she actually lost women workers from war jobs.

But dependency allotments are a small part of the broader economic picture. If inflation pinches pocketbooks, or taxes are heavy—in short, if it is hard to make ends meet—people will naturally look for work.

IN THE LAST WAR we did the job with high wages and printing press dollars. This method lured workers into war industries, but it also gave them idle money to spend on furs, night clubs and resorts. These idle dollars in turn meant manpower wasted on luxury services. We had as many people in trades and services at the end of the war as we had in peacetime, a very poor record.

The surest way to get people into a labor force is to make sure they do not have money to waste. If taxes are high, if corporate profits and dividends are shaved to the minimum, if people can spend only for necessities, and have a hard time doing that, you can almost guarantee a tight, effective use of manpower.

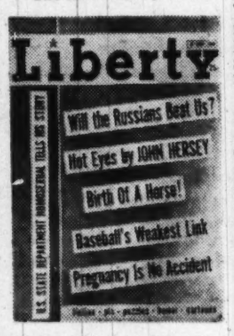
This is not the pleasant way to fight a war, perhaps. But there are even less pleasant ways, as the men in Korea can testify.

The Magazine Rack

By Orval Hopkins

LIBERTY is out with a new red-white-and-gold face and carrying a torch, albeit not precisely the type of flare held aloft by the lady in New York Harbor.

The new Liberty steams off to a fine start with three jolting titles: "Will the Russians Beat Us?", "Pregnancy Is No Accident" and "U. S. State Department Homosexual Tells His Story," the latter written anonymously by a Washington newspaperman.



The answer to the first title, Liberty indicates, is "Yes," unless we act to fend off and disrupt an incipient Russo-German rapprochement. The State Department story has a Washington locale, is sordid and sensational, contains several defensive statements by "psychiatrists," and concludes with this proposition:

"In the absence of any clear definition as to what constitutes homosexuality, the fear of accusation, however unfounded, may be a weapon in the hands of the opportunistic. Has Congress perhaps invited blackmail on a grand scale?"

The story about pregnancy tells of some people who didn't want their babies, and of some others who did. It doesn't seem to prove anything.

Liberty also has a story called "Baseball's Weakest Link," by Bob Cooke, sports editor of the New York Herald Tribune. Cooke's "weakest link" is Happy Chandler, the commissioner of baseball. He bases his accusation on Chandler's handling of the Paul Pettit case, the one in which the Pittsburgh Pirates grabbed off a young lefthanded pitcher for $100,000, much to the chagrin of some 15 other major league clubs.

JUULIAN HUXLEY points out in Harper's that the world's population, as some other people have said, is outstripping its resources. He says we could solve this problem in a few decades if we put our minds to it. But do we, he in effect asks, want to solve it?

"Let me again rub in," says Huxley, "the inescapable fact that every day there are some 60,000 more mouths to feed in the world and that every day this daily figure itself is going up." What we want to do, Huxley writes, is slow down this rate of increase and speed up the rate of improvement of standards all around the world."

"The Communists in America," by Justice Robert H. Jackson, also is in Harper's. It is a text, "somewhat abbreviated and divested of legal references," of Justice Jackson's opinion on the validity of the Taft-Hartley Act's loyalty oath. The Washington Post ran the opinion entire some months ago.

"Our Roads Are Going to Pot," writes Myron Stearns in Harper's. The situation in the country is bad enough, he says, but "cities are no better. The 14th st. bridge across the Potomac River at Washington carried between 70,000 and 80,000 vehicles a day, bumper to bumper, until a parallel bridge was put in." One good answer, he maintains, is a sharply higher gasoline tax.

THE STATE DEPARTMENT, writes Brig. Gen. Bonner Fellers, USA (Ret.), in Colliers, "has committed the United States to assist in holding western Europe's frontier . . . few professional military men of reputation believe such a program can succeed . . . We should terminate the Marshall Plan without delay. The Point Four Program should not be started. The Military Assistance Program also should be terminated immediately."

The way to beat the Russians, General Fellers figures, is to "launch immediately a full scale psychological campaign to drive a wedge between the Kremlin and the Russian people . . . The cost in relation to military expenditures would be almost negligible . . . We have a better chance to weaken Russia than we have to strengthen western Europe militarily, at far less cost."

A NUMBER of magazines carry pigskin reviews this week. Collier's puts Maryland first in the South and expects the Terps to meet Texas in the Cotton Bowl. Quick rates Maryland second behind Tennessee in the South, and the Saturday Evening Post places Jim Tatum's club tenth in the Nation.

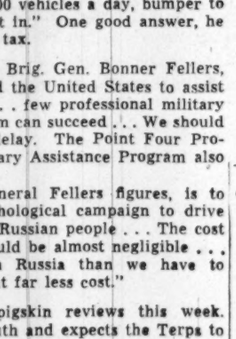
ROBERT C. RUARK, who can't seem to keep busy writing a column for a batch of daily papers, has a piece in Esquire about women, entitled, "What Hath God Wrought?" Milady is "very possibly the unhappiest creature on the face of the globe," Ruark observes. "She is on the way to becoming a definite third sex," he continues, broaching a rather terrifying possibility.

Esquire also has a complete new fashion section for men in which it says there has been a change from the "broad look" to the "new trim look." Anybody unfamiliar with either of these aspects has, obviously, lost step someplace.

Ruark, incidentally, also has an article in the current Flair. All about Bernard Baruch, a fellow, if more mature, North Carolinian.

Harper's Bazaar carries a wonderful new picture of Ethel Merman making a toast in the happy company of Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, authors, and Irving Berlin, composer, of "Call Me Madam," the musical based on the Perle Mesta story scheduled to hit Broadway in the fall.

"EVENTS in this anxious town bring to mind Eugene Meyer's definition of a political leader: A man who is only six months behind public opinion," writes Edward T. Folliard of The Washington Post in Nation's Business. Folliard says some of our legislators are just beginning to detect "a vast dissatisfaction in the land, not only with rising prices but with the whole national defense picture."



Some of the discontent is due to our penchant for sitting back and letting the aggressors take the initiative. The idea now, Folliard reasons, is to reach a stage as quickly as possible where we can deal with Moscow-inspired aggressions of the Korea type; and to build up such formidable military and economic power that Russia "will be willing to come to the council table and settle for a live-and-let-live agreement."

THE NEW issue of See carries the "The Walter Winchell Story," by Ed Weiner. It is a large encomium to New York's "one-man newspaper," whose column will be resumed in this newspaper September 18.

KURT SINGER, a writer, lecturer and former radio home-counselor, says in Tomorrow that radio had better straighten up if it wishes to survive. Singer declares that sports broadcasts are to men what soap opera is to women; that any nitwit with a pleasing voice and the ability to select popular records can become "the soul" of a station, and that radio has so knuckled under to the advertisers that it now appeals only to the lowest cultural and economic level in the listening potential.

Gerald Sykes, also in Tomorrow, takes a full swing at the fashion magazines. Sykes accuses them of fostering a fantasy life in the minds of women, which ill equips them to face the realities of their difficulties.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Lattimore 'Expanding' to Capital

By Drew Pearson

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY has just released an announcement that will make GOP Senator Joe McCarthy, the State Department's No. 1 detractor, most unhappy.

It may also upset Republican plans to make Owen Lattimore, the former State Department consultant whom McCarthy has been denouncing as a Communist "tool," an issue in this year's campaign.

Johns Hopkins, known the world over for its services to health and education, disclosed yesterday that its Walter Hines Page School of International Studies, of which Lattimore is director, will take over a similar institution in Washington—the School for Advanced International Studies at 1906 Florida ave. nw.

This will make Owen Lattimore even more important in the educational world. It will also show that, despite McCarthy's ravings, Johns Hopkins still thinks Lattimore is a good American.

Also significant is the fact that a high-ranking member of McCarthy's own party, GOP Representative Christian Herter of Massachusetts, helped arrange the merger—showing that Herter agrees with Johns Hopkins. Herter, a lifelong Republican, is chairman of the Washington school which is to be taken over by Lattimore's institution in Baltimore.

BRIG. GEN. LOU RENFROW, the jolly aide to Defense Secretary Louey Johnson, is the subject of the latest Pentagon gag. In civilian life, Renfrow is a dentist.

"It's a good thing," say the Pentagon boys, "that Louey Johnson has a dentist around. He puts his foot in his mouth so often!"

WALL STREET is quietly planning a sugar-coated propaganda campaign to win over the American farmer. Strategy is to repair bad feeling in the farm belt caused by power-trust opposition to rural electrification, reclamation and other Federal aids to agriculture.

The campaign will be managed by a Park ave. publicity firm, Stephen Fitzgerald Co., recently retained by the National Association of Electric Companies for a hefty fee of $64,000 a year. The publicity firm is under strict orders to abandon strong-arm methods and to seek advice from farm leaders on how to get back in the farmers' good graces.

The reaction of two outstanding farm leaders, however—Albert Goss of the National Grange and John Davis of the National Council of Farm Co-Ops—was not encouraging.

When Ray Baker, of the Fitzgerald publicity firm, called on Goss, the Grange master bluntly declared: "I'm a little bit suspicious of you fellows because of your activities in the past.

"I would prefer to see private industry do the job of electrifying our farms, but when private industry either can't or won't get the job done, then it's up to the Government or farm co-ops."

Davis likewise was dubious when Baker visited him and said he wanted to improve the "bad public relations" between farmers and the power companies.

"Tell us what is wrong," pleaded Baker.

In reply, Davis showed the New York publicist a list of contributors to the National Tax Equality Association, the Wall Street lobby which has been battling farm co-ops. More than 40 percent of the Tax Equality contributors were power companies.

"If you want to know why you can't get along with farmers, just look at this list," declared Davis. "How can you expect the farmer to be your friend when you organize and contribute to a campaign to kill off co-ops? We're naturally suspicious of you and we'll continue to be suspicious until you show us that you're really on the side of the farmer."

Baker admitted that the private utilities hadn't extended themselves to befriend the farmer, adding: "I guess it's up to us to do something about it."

SPADE-CALLING Representative Albert Engel of Michigan drew a practical analysis of how Communists are able to dominate China, at a recent secret session of the House Appropriations Committee. Telling of a visit to China in 1945, the Michigan Republican reported:

"To have an army that will win battles, you've got to have something to fight for. That's the trouble with China. I was there and had dinner with Chiang Kai-shek. We sat in a large banquet hall from 9 o'clock until 11. Everybody was in silks. They had everything to eat under the sun.

"The next noon we had lunch with the Chinese Communist leader, Mao Tse-tung, at the American Embassy. Mao and his generals came in wearing blue overalls. He was wearing a blue denim jacket that could be bought in my district for $1.50. He had a blue bandanna handkerchief around his neck.

"He was the kind of man that would appeal to a Chinese coolie, rather than Chiang Kai-shek. Then you add to that the fact that Chiang promised land reform for years, and that his administration was corrupt from one end to the other, and you can see why the Communists are successful there."

Secretary of State Acheson, who attended the meeting, fully agreed with the Congressman that the only recourse for the freedom-seeking Chinese people is the friendship of the United States. For that reason, Acheson said, it is imperative to expand the Voice of America.

Note—Other Republicans, such as Senator Knowland of California, who gets political support from Bank of China officials in San Francisco's Chinatown, disagree.

AFTER THREE WEEKS on the New Jersey waterfront, Senate investigators have come back with a shocking report of how seamen are recruited from taverns and brothels, how company officials are bribed to let union organizers aboard ship, and how hired spies are used to suppress union activity.

The investigators also brought back a case full of subpenaed records which will be turned over to the Senate Labor Committee. There is enough TNT in these documents to blow waterfront rackets sky-high.

The Senate Labor Committee sent investigators to New Jersey following a dispute between the tanker division of Cities Service and the Seamen's International Union over $150,000 in back wages and certain labor practices. Rather than submit to investigation, however, Cities Service hastily agreed to pay the full back wages and disband its company unions.

It was this suspicious behavior that brought Senate investigators into the picture. They discovered a labor espionage service which plants spies aboard tankers to watch for union activity and report back to company officials. This spy service, operated by Jack Duggan, is also supplied to Esso and Texaco.

The unions, in turn, frequently bribe petty company officials, and one Senate investigator actually watched a bribe being paid to a Cities Service personnel man to let a union organizer stay on board ship.

Labor abuses have weakened the unions to the extent that the companies can ignore the union and hire tanker men from taverns and brothels instead of hiring halls. This is a throwback to the days when shipping companies actually operated waterfront dives in order to keep seamen in their debt.

French Give More Ground on Reich

PARIS (NYHT)—Before leaving for the Big Three conferences in New York, French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman announced the latest step in the liberalizing of France's German policy.

He told correspondents that France views favorably the "temporary" lifting of the ceiling on German steel production fixed by the Western Allies.

One must remember back to 1946 to take in the full import of this statement. Then one will remember how France agreed reluctantly to set the limit on German steel at 3.6 million tons. (The present ceiling is 11.1 million tons).

One will remember how France vetoed even the most innocuous-appearing central administrative agencies for Germany. One will recall the emphasis not only on decentralization but on decartelization, dismantling and demilitarization.

The original French premise was that the Allies were strong enough to keep Germany down. A year or so ago France decided that, to modiffy an old expression, if you can't beat them, you should let them join you.

Schuman has been in charge of French foreign policy for the last two years, and the new policy of "understanding" with Germany is his.

At each step there have been cries of anguish, not only from the Communists but from the many Frenchmen who cannot think of Germany as anything but the perennial enemy. The Germans tnemselves have not always made it easy for Schuman; one might cite last winter's outburst over the Saar. Yet he has had a fine sense of the speed with which the majority of public opinion would permit him to proceed.—RUSSELL HILL.

Drive to Raise Pay Of Federal Workers Is Reported Under Way

A new drive to raise the pay of Federal workers is about to get under way on a broad scale.

In fact, it has already started in Government. The Defense Department has ordered surveys made of wages paid its half million per diem workers in the major labor areas. Some of these wage board employes already have been given boosts along the lines of similar increases given recently to private employes.

A survey of wages paid to Defense's 25,000 per diems in and near this city is now being conducted by a joint Army-Navy-Air Force board. Wage board employes in agencies outside of Defense also are planning to seek comparable boosts to those given Defense employes.

Leaders of the 1,500,000 classified and postal employes are closely watching the upward wage trend in both private industry and among Defense's per diem workers. They don't intend to have classified and postal employes lag behind the upward trend for any length of time.

The soaring cost of living is the spark behind the general pay raise drive in Government. One employe group after another is now demanding a pay boost to offset higher living costs.

The AFL's postal clerks got things started several weeks ago when its Cleveland convention demanded cost-of-living pay boosts. A similar resolution was adopted by the AFL's American Federation of Government Employes, and now the AFL's letter carriers are on record for higher salaries. These three unions have upward of 250,000 members.

The National Federation of Federal Employes will debate the wage question at its Los Angeles convention this week. In one way or another, the National Association of Rural Carriers, National Association of Employes of Collectors of Internal Revenue, National Association of Post Office Maintenance Employes all went on record at their conventions for higher "take-home" pay. And a score of other employe groups are all set to join the pay raise drive.

Several members of Congress are reported to be drafting bills to boost Federal pay. But if any of the bills are introduced at this late date it will be a mere gesture, as neither the Senate nor the House Post Office and Civil Service committee plans to consider any controversial legislation for the remainder of this year. The bills would be a build-up for next January when the pay raise drive will be in high gear, unless living costs slump unexpectedly in the meantime.

One of the several pay plans being talked about would direct a study be made of Federal salaries and their relation to rising living costs and a report made to the Congress next January. Such a survey would be made jointly by the Budget Bureau, Civil Service Commission, and the staffs of the Senate and House committees.

Advocates of the plan explain that Civil Service already is making a study, at the direction of Congress, aimed at paying higher salaries to employes in hazardous jobs. In addition, the Senate committee has directed the Budget Bureau and Civil Service Commission to make a survey of the entire problem of annual and sick leave and to make a report to Congress early next year.

If a factual study were made on Federal pay and living costs over the next several months, the Congress would be in a better position to act one way or the other early next year, its advocates point out. The study wouldn't need congressional approval. It could be requested by the chairman of either the Senate or House Post Office and Civil Service Committee.

Top personnel people in Government don't rule out a new pay raise. But they add the success or failure of the campaign will depend on: (1) the trend of living costs over the next several months, and (2) any general wage policy the Administration might issue.

RETIREMENT: Here is a decision of the Civil Service Commission that is of interest to every person covered by its retirement system. This is it in full:

"If an employee or annuitant designated a beneficiary before September 1, 1950, and dies prior to January 2, 1951, the person or persons so designated will be entitled to any lump sum which may be or may become due by reason of the death of the designator provided a claim for any benefit by reason of the death of the designator is received in the commission before January 2, 1951. It is not necessary that the claimant be the beneficiary. The fact that a claim has been received will preserve the right of the beneficiary. If no such claim is received in the commission before January 2, 1951, the beneficiary designation then is null and void and payment will be made in the order of precedence established by Public Law 547 as though no beneficiary had been designated.

"If an employee or former employee designates a beneficiary after August 31, 1950, such beneficiary will be entitled to any lump sum payment due regardless of when claim is received.

"All claims received in the commission on or after October 2, 1950, will be paid in the order of precedence set forth in Public Law 547 though death may have occurred prior to that date.

"A claim shall be considered to have been received in the commission as the date stamped on the first S. F. 100 or CSC Form 3000 received, and the rights of all claimants shall be determined in accordance with the laws and regulations in effect on that date."

Adm. Everett Badly Hurt, Wife Killed In Nev. Crash

Retired Officer From Alexandria En Route to New West Coast Home

Rear Admiral Gordon S. Everett, 46, USN (Ret.) of 507 Fontaine st., Alexandria, was seriously injured and his wife and the driver of another car were killed yesterday in a head-on collision 20 miles west of Elko, Nev.

State highway patrolmen said the other auto, driven by Gordon L. Ramsey, 23, of San Francisco, swung wide on a turn in Carlin Canyon and struck the car operated by Admiral Everett.

Two sailors hitch-hiking in Ramsey's auto were also injured. They are Warren R. Belleville, 22, of Tonawanda, N. Y., in critical condition, and Danny E. Parrott, 18, Mobile, Ala., in serious condition. Everett and the sailors were taken to the Elko General Hospital.

Everett and his wife, the former Frances Lee Huey, were driving west to live in San Francisco. They had no children.

Admiral Everett, born in Stewartsville, Mo., graduated from the United States Naval Academy, class of 1927.

Everett was navigation officer and later executive officer of the USS Alabama, 1942-45. He was chief of Naval Communications, 1945-48.

Holder of the Bronze Star, he was with Military Sea Transportation until his retirement in January of this year.

In the Washington area, six persons were injured yesterday at 9:10 a. m. a mile north of Oxon Hill, Md., when an auto apparently racing south on State Route 224 crossed to the wrong side and hit another car, according to Maryland State Police.

Peter R. Proctor, 24, 5350 St. Barnabas rd., Oxon Hill, driver of the car police said was racing, suffered possible brain concussion and was admitted to Casualty Hospital in fair condition.

Mrs. Bertha Clarke, 26, 6030 St. Barnabas rd., and her son Charles, 5, both in Proctor's auto, were admitted to Casualty in fair condition with cuts and bruises.

Glen Scott, 58, 6031 St. Barnabas rd., driver of the other car, and his two sons, Morris, 8, and Lawrence, 2, were treated at Providence Hospital. No charges have been made yet, police said.

Open Hearing Of Grunewald Testimony Set

Henry W. (The Dutchman) Grunewald is going to get the public hearing he wants before the Senate committee investigating wire tapping at 10:30 a. m. Monday.

Acting Chairman Matthew M. Neely (D., W. Va.) told The Washington Post from his Fairmont, W. Va., home yesterday that as far as he was concerned "it'll be wide open." Earlier, other senators on the committee had said it was up to Neely, chairman during the European trip of Senator Claude Pepper (D., Fla.).

Neely said he is very much interested in "any conversations Grunewald had with Shimon," meaning Police Lieut. Joseph W. Shimon, admitted wire tapper.

Grunewald is a former FBI agent, among his various capacities. For the past month the Senate committee also has been seeking him although the FBI located him.

The wire tapping case was before the grand jury here for some time, but collapsed when the statute of limitations took effect, some time before Grunewald turned up.

Shimon has denied that his wire tapping activities had any connection with the investigation by Senator Owen Brewster (R., Me.) into the activities of Howard Hughes, millionaire plane maker. Brewster,

Stolen Beer Van Recovered Minus 50 Cases of Brew

It had been parked outside a warehouse at 1249 New York ave., ne. Recovered on a parknig lot at S. Capitol and P sts. at 11 a. m., it contained only 350 cases.

The lanterns, described as irreplacable, were stolen Friday night from the backyard of Mrs. Florence C. Adams, 5609 Chevy Chase pkwy., nw. They were the property of Mr. and Mrs. Fulton Freeman, of 1327 30th st.

Chest Hopes to Tap Firms For 100,000 Added Givers

MRS. JOHN STEELMAN
. . . chairman of gala rally

MRS. HAROLD BURTON
. . . named unit chairman

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

The Community Chest is getting down to brass tacks to collect enough money for absolute minimum needs of its member agencies in the National Capital area for 1951.

With a goal of $4,100,000 to meet, the Chest Federation is concentrating on getting people to give where they work.

Hugh K. Duffield, general campaign chairman, yesterday asked business and Government employers to "open the way" for Chest volunteers to make collections from the gainfully employed in Greater Washington.

He explained that "difficulties have arisen in past campaigns because some employers declined to permit solicitations at their places of business on the grounds that their employes would be solicited at their homes anyway."

This year, Duffield said, there will be no general area-wide door-to-door solicitation of Washington homes.

"Actually, in Washington itself there has never been complete door-to-door solicitation," he said. "This has always been found impractical in Washington and in adjoining counties having extensive rural areas."

Another difficulty in past campaigns has been that workers declined to give at their places of employment, stating they would give to the home solicitor. "Tens of thousands of employes" have been missed because of this condition, Duffield estimated.

With the new emphasis, Duffield said the Community Chest Federation this year hopes to pick up at least 100,000 additional givers. Last year there were about 375,000 donors to Chest-members.

In keeping with the change in policy, Duffield announced that what used to be the residential unit will this year be transformed into the special solicitation unit, headed by Mrs. Harold Hitz Burton, wife of the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

Five Categories

This unit will seek givers who are not employed in business or Government work. Chest campaigners have broken these potential contributors into five categories:

1. The retired person; 2. The self-employed person who works in or out of his home; 3. The woman of independent means; 4. The woman who wants to give an additional gift in her own name above what her husband gives at his place of work; and 5. The domestic.

The 1951 campaign starts officially on October 12 and will end November 10 unless an extension is necessary. Prior to that time, however, there will be advanced solicitation of selected prospects, beginning Monday. Government solicitations will start September 26 and business employes' solicitation on October 10.

First general report meeting is scheduled for October 17, with report luncheons thereafter each Tuesday and Friday until November 10.

Federation campaign directors have announced these quotas for the nine campaign units which will strive for the $4,100,000 quota:

Government, $1,619,500; Business Unit I, $1,590,000; Business Unit II, $240,000; Special Solicitation Unit, $300,000; Alexandria, $78,000; Arlington County, $60,000; Fairfax County, $38,000; Montgomery County, $124,000; and Prince Georges County, $50,000.

Duffield warned that last year there was a $450,000 deficit in funds needed to meet the area's responsibility. In addition, there has been a $30,000 increase in local needs, and $70,000 more is needed for new off-post and on-leave services for armed forces members.

Duffield pointed out that more than 250,000 persons depend on Chest aid each year. Because of the failure of last year's campaign, he said, 880 persons did not get needed hospitalization; 1600 persons did not get clinic treatment; 77 children did not get institutional and convalescent care; 12 unwed mothers and their babies did not get help, and 3072 families did not get needed case work and counseling services.

Spending Outlined

The 1951 quota is to be spent as follows: for institutional care of the aged, $80,957.50; counseling and assistance, $753,615; care of dependent and neglected children, $572,584; boys' and girls' character development, $987,223; hospital care, $692,950; preventive and corrective medical care, $400,200; associated services to armed forces, $71,727; year-round administration and collection cost, $114,880; campaign expenses, $208,862.50. In addition, there is a $217,000 reserve for cancellation of pledges.

This year, Duffield cautioned Greater Washington residents, "Give Enough."

Red Feather Drive Names Mmes. Burton, Steelman

Appointment of two prominent Washington women to key posts in the Community Chest's 1951 drive was announced yesterday at Chest Federation headquarters.

Mrs. Harold Hitz Burton, wife of the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, will head the newly organized Special Solicitation Unit and Mrs. John R. Steelman, wife of the Assistant to the President, will be chairman of the "Red Feather Cavalcade."

Mrs. Burton served as chairman of the first annual Health and Welfare conference sponsored by United Community Services last May.

Mrs. Steelman will produce a "Cavalcade" which will be a rally launching the 1951 campaign. She is known for her work with the National Society for Crippled Children, the American Red Cross and the St. Louis Symphony.

Arlington School Board Asks $7.5 Million to Build Schools

Arlington County's school board yesterday approved a $7,450,000 building program to meet increased needs in the next two years and indirectly called for a referendum in November to authorize bonds for the project.

After approving the program outlined by School Superintendent William A. Early, the board adopted a resolution stating "it is the sense of this board that we would like to know by November if the funds are to be made available." This, members explained after the meeting, is an "invitation" to county residents to begin circulating petitions required to pave the way for the referendum.

To bring about a referendum in the fall general election, the petitions would have to go to the Circuit Court no later than October 7, it was pointed out.

The building program consists of these proposed projects: a new junior and senior high school to accommodate 2000 pupils at a cost of $3,500,000; three new elementary schools for 1050 pupils, $1,330,000; additions to six elementary schools for 750 pupils, $950,000; cost of replacements for the Page and Wilson schools, which would be abandoned in favor of more modern structures, $640,000; additional space for 200 to 300 elementary pupils at places not yet determined, $300,000; sites for schools to be built from 1953-60 for 4300 pupils, $430,000, and alterations to 12 existing schools, $300,000.

In outlining the program, Early said it was impossible to calculate the effect it would have on the county's tax rate in view of the fact that a general reassessment is under way in the county. By January 1, when the assessment report is completed, any figures prepared by the school board would be "outdated," Early said.

In citing the need for more buildings, Early pointed out that school enrollment figures in the last two years have confirmed predictions in 1948 that the school population would increase at the rate of 1500 pupils a year. He said the figures indicate the school population by 1956 will be 23,000, or double the 1947-48 enrollment of 11,492.

Schools are still overcrowded despite an extensive building program in the last two years, Early noted.

At yesterday's meeting the board also agreed to transfer funds from its bond account to purchase a warehouse at 1426 N. Quincy st. for school purposes.

Public Relations Group Will Hear Campbell

Wallace J. Campbell, director, Washington office, Cooperative League of the USA, will discuss public relations of the Co-op Movement, at 12:15 p.m., Monday at the regular meeting of the National Capitol Forge, American Public Relations Association, in the Lee House, 15th and L sts. nw.

Bond Issue For Parkway Land Voted

Planning Commission Authorizes $180,000 For Great Falls Roadway Purchase

The Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission has authorized a $180,000 bond issue to finance final land purchases for the proposed George Washington Memorial Parkway between the District line and Great Falls, Md.

The funds will be turned over to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which has already earmarked an equal amount for the Montgomery County section of the parkway.

The Federal Commission's long-range plans, based on the Capper-Cramton Act of 1930, envisage a continuous dual-road drive on both sides of the Potomac between Great Falls and Mount Vernon, Va., except for the portion within the District of Columbia.

2-Section Extension

Extension of the George Washington Memorial Parkway, which now runs on the Virginia side from Mount Vernon to the Key Bridge, is planned in two sections.

The first will take motor traffic under the Key Bridge and along the edge of the river almost a mile to Spout Run. The second proposed section will run up both sides of Spout Run, eventually connecting with the Arlington County road system at Lorcom Lane.

Announcement of the bond issue, to be sold in the near future, was made last night by Blair Lee 3d, vice chairman of the Maryland commission.

In a letter to John Nolen, jr., director of planning for the Federal commission, Lee said he hoped the $360,000 to be available shortly will be adequate to complete the land purchases required between the District line and Great Falls.

'A Few Islands'

"If a few islands in the middle of the Potomac River are still unaccounted for when the last of this acquisition fund is spent," he said, "I hope that fact will not prevent the National Park Service from proceeding with construction of the proposed parkway."

The Capper-Cramton Act requires equal contributions by the Federal Government, through the National Capital commission, and the local agencies for land purchase. The proposed parkway to Great Falls is to be built by the National Park Service entirely with Federal funds.

Park officials have estimated that about 75 percent of the land in the Montgomery County portion of the proposed park has already been bought. The remainder, Lee said, consists of several large tracts near Carderock, Md., some cottage sites near Brookmont, Md., and islands in the Potomac.

The proposed route is planned not only as a scenic drive, but as a traffic artery which, on the Virginia side, would relieve congestion at Rosslyn circle and Key Bridge. It would be a more direct route for residents of Cherrydale, Lorcom Lane and other communities farther north to drive to Memorial Bridge as well as Key Bridge.

Contract Let For Planning E. Capitol Span

A $395,000 contract has been awarded to a Baltimore engineering consultant firm to begin work on the new East Capitol Street Bridge, the District Highway Department announced yesterday.

Engineer Commissioner General Gordon R. Young estimated it will take about a year to complete initial studies for the bridge, for which a 12 million dollar cost has been authorized. The J. E. Greiner Co. of Baltimore will undertake the planning and study stages.

General Young said that the District has a "gentleman's agreement" with the National Capital Park and Planning Commission to explore three proposed routes for the bridge.

One of these would be a direct approach along East Capitol st. and over the Anacostia, the second would use Constitution and Independence aves. as western approaches to the Anacostia River and the third would see the western bridge terminus extended through the Gallinger Hospital grounds.

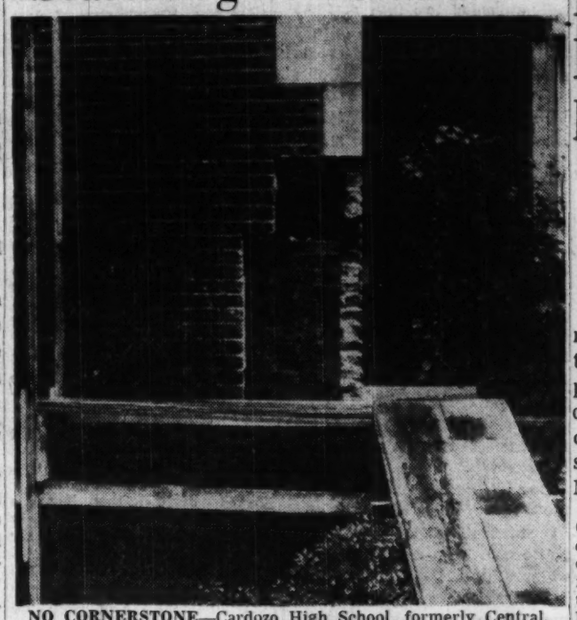
2-Month-Old Baby Dies of Suffocation At Bethesda Home

Allen Robert Wightman, 2-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Wightman, suffocated in his sleep yesterday at his home, 8302 Custer rd., Bethesda.

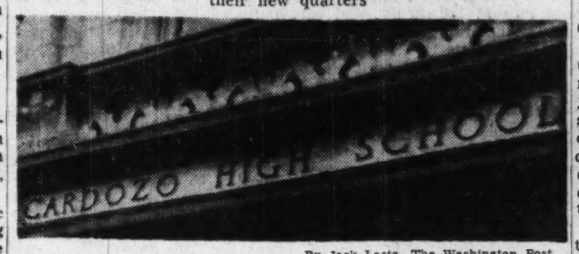
Dr. Frank Y. Jaggers, jr., of Bethesda, said the child apparently was smothered by bedclothes, as he slept in a chair which had been pushed against a bed.

Mrs. Wightman first noticed the baby's condition when she prepared to feed him. The father attempted artificial respiration, as did the doctor, who arrived before the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Rescue Squad.

New Career as Cardozo High About to Begin for Central



NO CORNERSTONE—Cardozo High School, formerly Central, lacks a cornerstone since the Central High School Alumni Association was permitted to remove the stone and transfer it to their new quarters



By Jack Lartz—The Washington Post

NEW NAME—A new name replaces the one of Central High School over the arches through which students of Cardozo High School will pass on their way to classes

The Central High School building officially becomes Cardozo High School Monday when the new term begins.

By yesterday, Cardozo's was the only imprint in and on the building—from the name over the entrance to the five monogrammed cheerleaders' megaphones in the assistant principal's office.

The Central High building was transferred to Cardozo last spring to relieve overcrowding in the city's Negro high schools. At the time, the move was protested bitterly by alumni of Central, oldest high school in Washington.

Central's trophies, the cornerstone, the decor of the Chinese Room—memorabilia of school history—have been transferred during the summer to three rooms at Western High School. Central's Alumni Asociation plans to establish a museum with the "souvenirs."

The major question yesterday was where.

The association has plans for the museum at Western. But Board of Education President C. Melvin Sharpe said the loan of the rooms is only "temporary."

"We agreed on the moving," said Sharpe, "out of decent respect for the rights of a large body of graduates. It is my understanding that they (the alumni association) have been permitted to use the rooms until they find a permanent place for their headquarters."

But Alumni President Edward T. Dunlap had definite plans in mind yesterday:

"We're going to tear a wall from one of the rooms," he said. "The Chinese Room will be duplicated. We have made measurements to insure that.

"We'll have an assembly room and a reading corner with murals from the library, and a kitchenette to make cocoa and coffee.

"It will be the sort of place where other alumni associations can meet as well."

Sharpe said he knew nothing of the alteration scheme. He said he did not know that the cornerstone was removed. (The association in a letter dated July 19 asked permission for removal of the cornerstone.)

School funds were used to move the memorabilia, Sharpe said. The board also permitted Miss Ruth McRae, assistant principal at Central, to oversee the collection. She will have this assignment through February.

Meantime, the library and the former Chinese Room have been repainted green, with traces of the panelling in the Chinese Room showing through the paint.

Only alumni property, however, has been removed from the school. Some school board property has been transferred to other schools.

Fairfax Civic Federation Blasts Study Group, Favors Manager

By William H. Smith
Post Reporter

A third Fairfax County organization yesterday leveled its guns on the report of a special government study commission which last week advocated adoption of the executive form of government for the county.

The Federation of Fairfax County Citizens Associations, in a formal statement on the commission report, charged it contains "both misstatements of law and fact and both omissions and misstatements of county conditions in an attempt to make the county executive form seem more than it is."

The report previously was criticized by the League of Women Voters and the county's Committee for Better Government.

Meanwhile, there was another development yesterday. Martin T. Webb, only commission member to vote against the report, announced that he planned to file a minority report advocating the county manager form of government. Another commission member, Vernon C. Lynch, who originally favored the county manager plan, but voted for the report because it gave residents an opportunity to vote for either manager or county executive, will be asked to join in the minority report, Webb said.

Hits District Elections

The citizens' federation, in its statement on the report, charged the commission "does not even pretend to offer a solution to the one element in the present form which is most intolerable to those who want good government." It referred to the system of electing supervisors under the county executive form, whereby one supervisor would be elected by the residents of each of the county's six magisterial districts.

Under the county manager plan, supervisors also would be elected from districts, but all voters in the county would participate in the selection of each member of the board.

Through district election of supervisors, the federation said, a "tiny minority" of 17 percent of the voters would be represented by half the board's membership. Three districts are agricultural and sparsely settled, while the other three are urban and contain 83 percent of the county's population, the federation said.

"It is inconceivable that any really impartial study group devoted to democratic principles could recommend that this situation be allowed to continue," the statement said. "Yet the county executive form, which the commission suggests, would keep election by districts, the very device which creates this inequitable representation."

The federation also took issue with the commission's statement that, under the county executive plan, the executive would have authority to appoint administrative employes, subject to the confirmation of the supervisors. Actually, it continued, the law provides that "the board of county supervisors shall appoint, upon recommendation of the county executive, all officers and employes in the administrative service of the county.

"Thus," the federation contended, "the policy board—not the executive—appoints."

Sentiment 'Ignored'

It also charged that the commission "neglected" to report that the law gives the board undisputed authority to suspend or fire any administrative employe without cause.

Also, the statement said, at every hearing conducted by the commission, "expressed sentiment was overwhelmingly for the county manager plan."

In conclusion, the statement predicted overwhelming indorsement of the county manager plan when the issues are submitted to a public vote on November 7.

Lundberg Is Criticized In Arlington Police Study

County Manager Blamed for Most Faults on Force; Board Asked Report

A three-man citizens' commission, appointed last May to investigate the Arlington police department, handed down a 17-page report yesterday, most of it devoted to scathing criticism of County Manager A. T. Lundberg.

The report, submitted to the County Board by E. J. Steger, chairman of the commission, cited an assortment of shortcomings in the department and laid the blame for most of them on Lundberg. It also accused him of being "uncooperative" through his failure to give the commission necessary data and charged him with causing "unnecessary delay" in the investigation.

Lundberg, the commission charged, ignored "nearly every recommendation" in a 1947 grand jury report that suggested ten steps for improving the police department. The county manager continuously refused to turn over to the commission his files on the grand jury's investigation, the report said.

Lundberg's failure to carry out the grand jury's recommendations, the commission said, was responsible for many of the faults it found with the department. It noted other shortcomings, however, and attributed them also to the manager.

Criticisms Listed

Criticisms of the department centered on the rate of pay, the number of men employed, the system of promotions, an alleged lack of proper training for policemen, methods of selecting recruits and several other phases of operation.

Among other things, the report called for more men and better pay, reorganization of administrative procedures to relieve Police Chief Harry S. Woodyard of "paper work," installation of radio equipment in police motorcycles, additional call boxes, an adequate personnel system, establishment of a training course to acquaint policemen with their duties and proper methods of filing reports, and operation of mock trials to acquaint policemen with court procedure.

Both the safety-traffic bureau and the juvenile bureau were commended, but the committee charged "there is complete lack of cooperation and harmony between the child welfare counselor and county manager to assist in the improvement or morale of the least favored part of the Arlington population."

Of Chief Woodyard, the commission said he has tried, "as best he could, to organize a department that is highly specialized and admittedly beyond his comprehension, for he has had no formal or basic police training or education."

'Hit and Miss'

"What Chief Woodyard has learned about the technical aspects of police administration has been under the guidance of hit and miss procedures, as well as the school of hard knocks," the report stated. "Here lie the basic reasons that have caused the Arlington Police Department the many embarrassments and harassments that it has received down through the years.

During its interview with Woodyard, the commission said, the chief was "very courteous and readily answered many embarrasing questions without hesitation."

Citing the suspension of Detective Chief B. Burns Pressley by Lundberg in 1947 and his subsequent reinstatement, the commission said Pressley now is "fearful of every step he makes."

The report also criticized Dr. W. C. Welburn, county coroner. It accused Welburn of failing to report to the scene of fatalities investigated by the police department and cited one instance in which it alleged the coroner authorized by telephone the removal of a body he had not actually viewed.

Serving with Steger on the investigation committee were Joseph Leib and Vic Gauzza, jr.

Police last night were searching for the gun used in the shooting.

Policeman Critically Wounds 2 in Depot

A plainclothes Washington Terminal police private shot and critically wounded two men at 12:15 a.m. today when they tried to park their sedan in the baggage garage under the west end of Union Station, police said.

Daniel Wolff, 22, of 7327 Forest rd., Kent Village, Md., a Terminal policeman two years, said the pair jumped him when he approached their car to tell them not to park in the garage.

Police said Wolff emptied five 38-caliber slugs from his service revolver into the men after they knocked him down.

The wounded men were identified at Casualty Hospital as Oliver Davis, 26, of 1316 Wallach pl. nw., and Ernest F. Pearson, 22, of Philadelphia. Pearson was shot in the left groin and Davis was hit in the stomach.

One of the attackers grabbed the revolver, which contained only five shots, and tried to shoot Wolff, police said. Then Wolff was pistol-whipped.

John Ackers, a baggage porter, ran to Wolff's aid and grabbed the revolver. One of the assailants fell to the floor. The other staggered to the Union Station west entrance at 1st st. nw. and collapsed, according to police.

A woman, Davis' wife, identified as Elizabeth, 30, was in the auto, but did not take part in the attack, Terminal police said.

$1,529,930 Total

Fire Losses Up 50 Pct. Over 1949

The District's loss from fires jumped nearly 50 percent during the past fiscal year and the number of fires went up by more than 900.

That is what Fire Chief Joseph A. Mayhew told the District Commissioners yesterday in his annual report on operations of his department.

He said that for fiscal 1950, Washington had a rate of 7.3 fires per 1000 population, as compared with 5.4 per 1000 for 1949.

The fire loss jumped 49 per cent, with the total reported as $1,529,930, an increase of $501,880 from 1949. The jump was blamed on a few very costly blazes during the year, with 15 of the 5807 fires reported during the year carrying 46 percent of the entire loss.

The average loss per fire also increased during the year, to $263.45, an increase of $53.25. The per capital loss went up from $1.14 in 1949 to $1.93 during the 1950 fiscal year.

To add to the department's troubles, the number of false alarms increased during 1950 by 89. A total of 1246 were turned in.

The fire department attributed eight of the year's fires to incendiary origins, and cited 44 others as being of a suspicious nature.

The department served notice in 11,842 cases that fire hazards existed and performed 151,175 fire prevention inspections

Among improvements noted by Chief Mayhew for the year were equipping all engine companies with 1½-inch hose, described as "one of the greatest firefighting advancements the department has experienced in recent years."

'Miss Alabama' Wins Contest For 'Miss America of 1951'

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Sept 9 (AP).—Brown-haired Yolande Betbeze of Mobile, Ala., was named "Miss America of 1951" tonight.

The 21-year-old Southern belle, who entered the contest as "Miss Alabama," received a tremendous ovation from the audience of close to 19,000 persons.

Wearing a white evening dress, the 5-foot, 5½ inch beauty walked smiling to the center of the huge stage. She received two dozen American Beauty roses and a regal robe was placed around her shoulders.

Miss Alabama was selected after the field of finalists had been whittled to five: "Miss Alabama," "Miss Arkansas," "Miss Florida," "Miss Oklahoma" and "Miss South Dakota." She will receive a $5000 scholarship, a new automobile and a chance to earn about $50,000 through personal appearances.

The judges, after watching 54 contestants in three days of preliminaries, picked 16 finalists for beauty, personality and talent at the opening of this evening's pageant finale. Miss District of Columbia (Sandra Joanne Stahl, 21), was one of the 16.

The 16 beauties then began a more-than-three-hour ordeal. They paraded before the judges singly and in groups, dressed in bathing suits and evening gowns. Each contestant also displayed once again the talent she hoped would help her to the coveted crown. Five of the 16 finalists made the grade as the result of these performances and the paring process continued.

The new "Miss America" succeeds retiring titlist Jacque Mercer of Phoenix, Ariz.

Watts Branch Contract Let

A right angle turn is fine—but not in a stream.

That is what the District Highway Department has decided about Watts Branch. The department wants to straighten the branch, build a new bridge over it and widen and repave a mile of Division ave. ne., which runs over the bridge.

At present, the area in the vicinity of the branch—East Capitol st., Sheriff rd. and Division ave.—has been repeatedly flooded because of the character of the stream.

Leo Butler Co. of College Park, Md., has submitted a $95,481 low bid for construction of the bridge. The District will open bids September 22 for a project involving paving East Capitol st. to Sheriff rd. and Eastern ave. in the bridge vicinity. The work is expected to cost about $200,000.

Entailed in the job would be widening the roadway from 30 feet to 40 feet. The new bridge, for which the contract has not yet been awarded, is to be of stone facing and will be in keeping with the park development at Watts Branch. It will be located on the new alignment of Division ave., which is to be about 80 feet south and 20 feet west of the present bridge.

Man Shot By Off-Duty Officer Dies

A Washington policeman, working as a nightwatchman during a 10-day leave, fatally shot a 48-year-old prowler early yesterday, at 3400 Kenilworth ave., just over the District Line in Bladensburg, Md.

Lewter

Fred M. Shelton, 48, who lives behind the Kenilworth ave., address, was shot in the chest and leg at 12:11 a. m. He died in Fredman's Hospital at 2:14 p. m.

The off-duty policeman is Pvt. Mason T. Lewter, 40-year old father of four, assigned to the Twelfth precinct.

Lewter was given leave on September 5, and was spending the leave as a night watchman for the Silbey Iron Works, and the Metropolitan Block and Supply Co., next door.

Lewter told Prince Georges County Police he hailed a passing truck driver early yesterday morning when he saw a light in the Iron Works office. He and the truck driver started to enter the premises, when they heard the sound of a pistol being cocked, Lewter said.

Lewter said he ordered the prowler to come out with his hands up. The door opened, Lewter said, and he saw Shelton carrying a pistol, aimed at the truck-driver.

Shelton then pulled the trigger, Lewter said, but his gun jammed. Then Lewter said he opened fire. He fired four times, hitting Shelton twice, once in the leg, and once in the arm and chest.

Investigation by Prince Georges County police showed that a bullet had been inserted backwards in the chamber of Shelton's pistol and that Lewter's police revolver had been fired four times.

Police said Lewter had been asked to act as a nightwatchman by a friend, Robert Mateer, owner of the supply company, and Sam Sibley, owner of the ironworks, since objects had been missing recently from both stores.

Shelton and employe of the iron works for about six years, had also been asked to watch the stores, police said, and had been given a key.

But, Detective Richard Pearson added, the gun Shelton was carrying was a German automatic that had been locked in a desk drawer. Shelton had been given no key for the desk, Pearson said. Fifteen half-pints of District whisky were found in the store, and police said neighbors noted heavy traffic in the buildings during weekends.

Prince Georges County police served a technical warrant on Lewter charging him with manslaughter. The officer was released in the custody of his superior, Pieut. Lafone Starkweather, for a hearing in Hyattsville, September 14.

Lewter, a veteran of 10 years on the Washington police force, lives at 1373 Downing st. ne.

Fairfax County Polio Rate Highest in Washington Area

Fairfax County has the highest rate of poliomyelitis on a population basis of any sector of Greater Washington, the D. C. Health Department said yesterday.

So far this year, Fairfax County has had 32.6 cases per 100,000 population, compared with 13.3 cases per 100,000 in Washington. Lowest rate has been in Alexandria, with 11.4 cases per 100,000 reported.

The Health Department prepared its table of rates "since the actual number of cases reported in the various parts of the metropolitan area of Washington does not give a very accurate indication of incidence."

The Department's bureau of public health education said rates for Greater Washington "cannot be considered to be high especially when compared with certain other parts of the country." Except for Alexandria and Fairfax County, the incidence rates this year are lower than in the peak year of 1944.

Incidence rates per 100,000 population for other sections are Arlington County, 15.0; Montgomery County, 22.5 and Prince Georges County, 23.2.

The Department reported eleven new District polio cases during the week just ended, of which four were paralytic. In addition, 19 nonresident cases were hospitalized here. A total of 35 cases, both resident and nonresident, are still under treatment in Children's Hospital, and 19 in Gallinger Hospital.

Senate Group To Ballot on Area Projects

Funds for several major Washington area projects will be voted on this week by the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Beginning Tuesday, the committee will start to act on the supplemental appropriation bill. The measure, already passed by the House, may not reach the Senate floor until next week, however.

President Truman has asked for the inclusion of $139,800,000 to begin a dispersal program for the Government by constructing new buildings at four sites in Maryland and Virginia.

The District Commissioners have asked that the Senate restore the full $290,000 they sought for the District's civil defense program, slashed by the House to a bare $30,000.

Airport Fund Asked

The President has asked for $2,150,000 to buy the land and do the engineering work for the new metropolitan Washington civil airport, expected to be located in Fairfax County, Va. It eventually will cost about 12 million dollars.

The commissioners have asked for restoration of funds the House cut from numerous District items, incuding money to repair heating equipment at Upshur st. hospital.

While the committee appears likely to grant all or a major part of the $290,000 civil defense money, the vote on the dispersal project is uncertain. There is overwhelming sentiment for some sort of program, but not much agreement that the President's proposal is the best possible.

Meanwhile, there were these developments on the over-all civil defense picture:

A meeting was scheduled for Sunday, September 17, at the Corcoran Art Gallery of all planning commissions in the metropolitan area. The gatherings, originally called for today, will consider the dispersal program and the problems it presents to out-lying areas.

Park Bill Called For

The American Institute of Architects yesterday called for enactment of the bill to reorganize the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

The bill passed the Senate a year ago but is now stuck in the House District Committee. Chairman John L. McMillan (D., S. C.) has indicated he sees no reason for action at this time.

The Government Printing Office indicated the scope of public interest in the civil defense program with an announcement that its newest best seller, "The Effects of Atomic Weapons," is in a third printing. The first printing of 10,000 copies was exhausted the first day, a second printing of 20,000 is now gone and a third printing of 15,000 will be off the presses in a few days. The booklet sells for $1.25.

The National Securities Resources Board's master civil defense plan, long in the making, is scheduled to make its appearance on or before October 1. This was announced in Chicago yesterday by the National Governors' Conference executive committee after a meeting on Friday with officials of NSRB's civil defense unit in closed session.

Gay Nineties Streetcar Rolls Again Through District Today

A "Toonerville Trolley" used in Washington over a half century ago will roll over the tracks again here today with two-score transit enthusiasts in Gay Nineties costumes aboard.

The trip will point up Transit Progress Day, to be celebrated locally and nationally Monday.

The little old streetcar and the motorless trailer it pulls have been taken out of mothballs and slicked up by Capital Transit Co. for the ride today.

Aboard in costumes befitting the conveyance will be members of Tractioneers, a group of transit fans which includes lawyers, doctors, mail carriers and an atomic scientist.

Starting from Peace Monument at 12:30 p. m., the Gay Nineties streetcar will make its way for four hours over various routes used today by its streamlined descendants. It will go as far as Rosslyn, to 13th and D ne., 14th and Decatur nw., and Mount Pleasant, among other places.

In connection with Transit Progress Day, Capital Transit Co. announced winners in a contest on "What Transit Progress Means to Me."

First-prize winner of a $100 savings bond is Mrs. J. Rex Pimlott of 17 Ericsson rd., Bethesda.

Second prize of a $75 bond goes to Ann Spainhour, of 1638 Rhode Island ave. nw., and third prize of a $50 bond to McLellan Smith of 611 Davis pl. nw.

E. D. Merrill, president of Capital Transit, will present the prizes Monday in his office.

School Safety Patrol Police Honored by AAA at Luncheon

The cops who help make it safe for the kids to cross streets were honored yesterday by the American Automobile Association on the eve of school-opening here next week.

Men of the Metropolitan Police force and of police departments in nearby communities heard their work praised at the annual police coordinator luncheon in the Washington hotel.

These school safety patrol coordinators are the policemen who work directly with the schools in promoting traffic safety, holding daily meetings with the boy safety-patrols.

"Emceeing" the program, George R. Hammond, AAA director of safety and education, gave vivid proof of the effectiveness of the school safety patrol program.

"A quarter century ago before this program started, we had 19 fatalities among school children," Hammond pointed out. "This year we have had only one fatal accident to a school-child between the hours of 8 and 4."

Brief speeches were made by Washington Cleveland, manager of the D. C. division of AAA; Inspector William J. Cunningham and Assistant Superintendent Walter T. Storm of the Metropolitan Police; Lawson Canttrell, associate superintendent of District Schools; G. Gardner Shugart, superintendent of Prince Georges county schools; Dr. Edwin Broome, superintendent of Montgomery county schools, and Miss Maude Burke, representing the Catholic Archdiocese of Washington.

Stealing Same Salmon Twice Gets 30 Days

You can't steal the same three cans of salmon twice, even on Friday, Municipal Court Judge George D. Neilson ruled yesterday.

Allen Wilmore, 37, of 208 D st., nw., was given a 30-day jail sentence for trying.

Grocer David A. Silver, 409 3d st., nw., testified Wilmore came into his store at 9 a. m., Friday, grabbed three cans of pink salmon, shouted "charge it" and ran out. Silver said he chased and caught Wilmore and called the police. They told him to get a warrant and released Wilmore.

Two hours later, Silver testified, Wilmore returned, took the same three cans from the shelf and again fled. Again Silver chased and caught him. This time he got a warrant.

Wilmore denied everything in court, but Judge Neilson found him guilty, noting that Wilmore had a record of more than 40 arrests, and was released Wednesday from a 10-day disorderly conduct sentence.

Janitor Suffers Serious Injuries In 3-Story Fall

Leon Whitaker, 28, of 2716 Porter st. nw., was in undetermined condition at Gallinger Hospital last night after he fell 60 feet from the third floor of that address to a concrete areaway. He suffered a fractured right leg and head injuries.

Police said Whitaker and his brother, William, 30, both janitors at the Porter st. apartment house, had an argument about 7 p. m. in their basement quarters.

Apparently to flee the argument, detectives said, Leon Whitaker ran up to the third floor and swung onto a drainpipe from a hallway window. They believe he intended to slide down the rainpipe and fell.

Maine to Elect on Monday

By The Associated Press

The Maine State election Monday with the Korean crisis figuring in the congressional races will launch the busiest political week before the November general elections.

The next day seven States from New England to the Far West will hold primaries to choose candidates for 5 Senate and 41 House seats and 6 Governorships.

Senators Carl Hayden (D., Ariz.) and Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.) face tough intraparty contests in their bids for renomination. Senators Eugene D. Millikin (R., Colo.); George D. Aiken (R., Vt.), and Warren G. Magnuson (D., Wash.) have no primary challengers.

Besides the seven State primaries including Michigan and Minnesota gubernatorial and House races—Texas Republicans will do some candidate picking in State convention and Mississippi Democrats will conduct a runoff primary in the third Congressional District Tuesday.

After that, primaries in Maryland, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Wisconsin later in the month will wind up the writing of major party slates to go before the Nation's voters November 7.

Here is this week's picture in brief:

Monday—Maine election, always first in the country. Governor Frederick G. Payne and Representatives Robert Hale, Charles P. Nelson and Frank Fellows, all Republicans, figure to win over Democratic opponents, but the Democrats have put up an unusually stiff fight against the sitting representatives.

Republicans have won every major office in Maine since 1934.

Governor Payne is opposed by Democrat Earl S. Grant, Portland educator. A third candidate, Leland S. Currier, lumberman, is running as a States' Rights Democrat.

Republicans in the campaign criticized the Administration's handling of events leading up to Korea. Democrats responded the GOP was using the Korean affair to cover up their own shortcomings.

Representative Hale's opponent is Miss Lucia Cormier, State Representative and Democratic National Committeewoman. Representative Nelson faces John J. Maloney, jr., Representative Fellow's Democratic challengar is John V. Keenan.

Tuesday—New Hampshire primaries: Chief interest is in the fight for the Republican Senate nomination between Senator Tobey, who votes often with Administration forces in the Senate, and Wesley Powell, an attorney and former aide in the office of Senator Bridges (R., N. H.).

Observers rate this a close one. Powell has attacked what he called Tobey's "Trumanism." Tobey says his experience is needed in Washington.

Emmet J. Kelley, National Committeeman, is unopposed for the Democratic Senate nomination.

Arizona—Senator Hayden, chairman of the Senate Rules Committee and second to Chairman McKellar on the Appropriations Committee, faces two men named Miller in his bid for a fifth nomination in the Democratic primary.

Cecil H. Miller, Phoenix cattleman, is regarded as the principal opponent. The other is Robert E. Miller, Phoenix druggist and an Arizona leader in Henry Wallace's Progresive Party in 1948.

Cecil Miller accused Hayden of being too strongly pro-Administration; that as a member of the Appropriations group he is partly responsible for the Korean war. The other Miller says Hayden has not given the Administration strong enough support. Hayden has defended Mr. Truman's Korean policies, but has expressed opposition to the Brannan farm plan and compulsory health insurance. He figures to win.

Bruce Brockett, rancher, is unopposed for the Republican senatorial nomination.

VERMONT—Senator Aiken is unopposed for Republican renomination. James Bigelow of Bellows Falls has no rival for the Democratic nomination.

For Vermont's lone House seat being voluntarily vacated by Representative Charles A. Plumley (R) there are five candidates on the Republican side, including Gov. Harold J. Arthur, who became Governor when Ernest W. Gibson resigned to go to the Federal bench. Democrats have no contests for any major candidacy.

Colorado—Senate nominations are as good as made. Senator Millikin has no GOP opposition and Representative John A. Carroll of Denver is unopposed for the Democratic nomination.

Gov. Walter H. Johnscon, who succeeded Gov. Lee Knous when the latter became a Federal judge last spring, is unopposed for the Democratic nomination.

Washington—With Senator Magnuson as good as nominated by the Democrats, the GOP Senate nomination race is viewed generally as a close four-way affair, with W. Walter Williams, Seattle businessman, as possibly the man to beat. Other candidates are Mrs. Janet Tourtellotte, National Committeewoman; George Kinnear of Seattle and Albert F. Canwell of Spokane. A fifth candidate, Carl V. Holman, is unknown politically. Canwell was chairman of the one-term State Legislature's Committee on Un-American Activities.

Michigan—There's no Senate race here, but 51 Republicans and 68 Democrats are running for nominations to 17 House seats.

Minnesota—Gov. Luther W. Youngdahl (R.) has four opponents for renomination, while eight Democrats seek the right to oppose the winner of this contest in November.

Pennsylvania GOP Platform Says U. S. Has Lost Cold War

PITTSBURGH, Sept. 9 (AP).—The Pennsylvania Republican Committee adopted today a 3500-word campaign platform charging the Truman Administration failed to provide adequate National defense despite record expenditures.

Apparently making international affairs the keynote of the State campaign, the Republicans declared the United States has lost the cold war "but dares not lose the hot war."

The platform said "the blame for Russia's unquestioned advantage in Asia today lies directly upon the Democratic doorstep."

The GOP pledged the party in Pennsylvania and its candidates to do all things necessary to put the National defense in order.

Gov. James H. Duff, the party senatorial nominee who is challenging Democratic incumbent Francis J. Meyers, wrote the plank on international affairs.

Said the platform:

"Americans have been duped as to the security of the United States. The Democratic Administration repeatedly has stubbornly refused to alert the country to the real danger of subversive activities within our borders. We have had foisted upon us a deliberately false theory which substituted economic for military bolstering of United Nations' Allies long under threat of Red domination."

Judge John S. Fine, GOP gubernatorial candidate, declared:

"We are opposed to that rufescent (reddish) deology of the Democratic Party of "Haphazard Harry" who calls traitors, Red herrings—a full-scaled war a police action—and an heoric fighting group of our armed forces, the Marines, Naval police.

Pioneer D. C. Auto Repairman And Wife Married 50 Years

MRS. HARTUNG

HARRY B. HARTUNG

Back at the start of the century, when steam autos were popular and the "gasoline buggy" a menace to life and navigation, a Washington couple took marriage vows and began life together.

Yesterday, Harry B. Hartung, 76, and Mary Frances Hartung, celebrated 50 years of married life—a half century that saw the "horseless Carriage" evolve into today's sleek automobiles.

The fiftieth anniversary ceremony was held at the home of the Hartungs' son, Samuel H. Hartung of 2100 31st pl. se. Present were close friends and the other Hartung son, Charles A., of Annapolis.

If he wanted to yesterday, Harry Hartung could look back over the 50 years and recall one of his first jobs here, as head mechanic in 1901 for the old W. C. Koller Carriage Co. at 1026 Connecticut ave. nw.

The company was dealer for Locomobile Steamer and Waverly Electric autos, and Hartung got to know their inner workings well.

By 1905, he had a similar job with F. S. Cahill at 1319 L st. nw., dealer or the renowned Stanley Steamers.

With such a background, Hartung can well claim to be one of the "oldest hands in the auto game in Washington." He got his first driver's permit in 1903—No. 356—issued by the D. C. Boiler Inspector "who couldn't drive, himself."

In 1916, Hartung bought his first automobile—a "merry Oldsmobile."

About 1910, he began working for the old Federal Taxicab Co. at 14th and C sts. nw., in charge of the company repair shop. He was there 10 years.

Then he opened his own general auto repair shop at 22d and M sts. nw. He retired about two years ago, almost totally blinded with cataracts.

But a successful operation on one eye returned his sight and today "I can read a newspaper with the best of them."

What does an old-timer think of the new cars? Most ways, they're better: "Years ago, they came without windshields and even tops—you had to buy them as "extras."

H. L. Mencken, 70 Tuesday, Gives MSS. to Pratt Library

BALTIMORE, Sept. 9. (AP)—H. L. Mencken, sharp-penned newspaperman, critic and author, will be 70 next Tuesday and in celebration he's pulling a "Mencken."

Mencken

The writer of the noted "The American Language" series and scores of other works usually prefers to ignore his birthday. But this one will be different—in reverse, of course.

The principal gift will go from him, not to him.

He's depositing the great bulk of his literary accumulations in the Enoch Pratt Free Library here.

Emerson Greenaway, director of Pratt, said it appears to be the outstanding literary deposit announced anywhere in the Nation this year.

Filling nine tiers of seven shelves each, the books and manuscripts comprise thousands of individual items.

Actually, the process of donation started back in 1942. But this is the first time public announcement of the literary deposit has been authorized by the sage of Baltimore.

Already some of his work has been made available at the library to accredited scholars in the field.

'Big 3' Can't Meet This Crisis With Mere Dollars

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

THE Foreign Ministers of the United States, Britain and France will meet in New York this week at a dangerous time.

Once again, as in the gloomy winter of 1947, there is a sense of perils mounting, of time being wasted, of decisions delayed or evaded too long.

When western Europe was faint from economic weakness in 1947, Gen. George C. Marshall made the well-remembered statement that the patient was sinking while the doctors deliberated. The whole continent seemed ready to fall under Communist control.

The American response was slow, but when it came it was bold and imaginative. The Marshall Plan set the patient on his feet and averted a measureless disaster to the western world.

Today the danger is of a different order. The lightning in the air seems more menacing than it did in 1947, and for military rather than economic reasons. This time the Kremlin has been reckless enough to order the crossing of an international frontier, and may be reckless again.

Another Nick of Time

TO REPEL this aggression in Korea, the United States has had to commit virtually all of its trained ground forces, and has no troops of any consequence left for possible emergencies elsewhere. And the Korean war threatens to be longer and harder than had been foreseen.

In the meantime, western Europe is relatively defenseless, facing what Winston Churchill has called the "hideous gap" between what it has and what it needs to check a possible Soviet invasion.

These are the somber facts the Foreign Ministers will have to deal with. Clearly the time has come for decisions as bold and imaginative, in the present-day context, as those that came just in the nick of time in 1947 and 1948.

The United States and its partners have already begun to draft, train and equip new divisions, and the western world has begun to divert some of its prodigious industrial power to war production. But this time the United States cannot buy security just by providing weapons or dollars.

One Welcome Step

THE FACTS of the situation will compel the United States to station additional divisions in Europe, even though it has no divisions available now; to put an American chief of staff in charge of the combined defense effort, and ultimately to make him a supreme commander when he has an army to command; and, finally, to find a way of using German manpower in the collective defense of western Europe.

Nothing short of American divisions can galvanize the Europeans into putting more men and money into their own rearmament efforts. It may even be necessary to send raw American troops to Germany for training on European soil, and to speed the flow of European pilots and other specialists to the United States and Canada for training.

For Frenchmen, Germans and Britons alike, the sight of American troops in Europe has come to have a symbolic value. The new American formations do not yet exist, but when they do there may well be another American parade through Paris, a peacetime morale-builder like the unforgettable sight of the Fourth Division swinging down the Champs Elysees in 1944.

The Europeans will have to match new American contributions by their own; the Administration here is sure to insist on it. Official Washington was glad when the French and British decided to lengthen their compulsory military service, but it knows still greater efforts will be needed.

However unpopular it may be—and rearmament is deeply discouraging to the Europeans—there probably will have to be some reduction in the European standard of living because of pressing military needs. The Europeans may have to abandon their present system of haggling over who pays whom for military equipment, and how; and they may have to substitute a simpler method of bookkeeping among themselves, like the lend-lease and mutual aid system of wartime.

In any event, all three Foreign Ministers, American and European alike, will have the shadow of Soviet power and Soviet recklessness looming over them, and will know that they have no time to lose.

Nobody in authority has yet contradicted the Churchill estimate that the Soviet Union could hurl 80 divisions against the west, including 25 armored divisions, without mobilizing. Nobody has challenged his statement that the west can muster only 12 divisions, two of them armored, at the present time.

There is some consolation in knowing that the United States has overwhelming atomic superiority for another year or two; that the non-Soviet world is almost solid in support of the United Nations' action in Korea; that western Europe has made an amazing economic recovery; that non-Communist Asia has not yet fallen under Kremlin control.

None of these comforts, however, can

See MINISTERS, Page 3, Column 5

Paris may see this sight again—in peacetime, and soon. This is the march of thousands of American soldiers along the Champs Elysees during Paris' liberation celebration August 26, 1944

A 1960 'Review' of World War III

Several distinguished Americans have tried looking back from 1960, in a recent series published in the Saturday Review of Literature. The latest to try his hand at writing history a decade before it happens is Elmer Davis, author, essayist, news commentator and wartime chief of OWI. The Washington Post reprints his 1960 story of the present decade with the permission of the publishers. His venture into historical fantasy looks back on World War III, or what he calls the Ninth World War.

By Elmer Davis

Now that the Ninth World War has ended, and we resume the Sisyphean labors of reconstruction, we can do so with at least a somewhat clearer concept of what can and what cannot be accomplished than after either the Seventh or the Eighth.

In 1919 too many people believed that things would reconstruct themselves; in 1945 we knew better, but still believed we could do more than proved feasible. By now we have learned that the course, and the consequences, of great historical events seldom bear out even the most learned and thoughtful of advance predictions.

Forecasts of the Seventh World War began as early as 1871, with "The Battle of Dorking"; but none of the many fictional previews published in the ensuing 73 years foresaw either the major political consequence of that war—the collapse of four empires—or its outstanding tactical feature, the trench line from Switzerland to the sea.

In the two decades that followed, the art of apocalypse was briskly practiced; and virtually all of those who previewed the Eighth World War thought it would end in total and general destruction. They had seen the small-scale air raids of the Seventh War; and under the influence, direct or indirect, of General Douhet, who thought he could win a war in an afternoon, they extrapolated the trend and extrapolated it clear off the chart.

They gravely underestimated the durability and resilience of modern technological organization; they still more gravely underestimated the stubbornness and endurance of the human race.

Dealt in Absolutes

THIS might have given pause to those who forecast the course and consequences of the Ninth War; but they felt they could disregard experience because they were now dealing with an unprecedentedly destructive weapon. Nor was it only the possibilities of devastation that had been intensified; the danger came now from a tyranny more extensive and far more elaborately organized than had ever been known before.

So it is not surprising that the writers of political apocalypse and other forms of science fiction, when they previewed the Ninth World War, should have dealt in absolutes—either total destruction of civilization or else, after Ragnarok, a new heaven and a new earth.

It is human nature to hope that stupendous effort will lead to some concrete conclusion; it is at least American nature to look for a satisfactory conclusion, a happy ending, whatever trials may have gone before. Yet the record of history shows that almost every great crisis has issued in a state of affairs which was either somewhat, though not millennially, better or somewhat, though not castastrophically, worse.

The rule is not without exceptions; the campaigns of Genghis Khan were castastrophic enough, for people who got in his way. Apocalyptic writers of the later forties felt they were dealing with a weapon as destructive as Genghis Khan; but they too extrapolated, assuming that what it might someday be it was already. They forgot that it must be delivered to its target—or else they posited, in that delivery, a degree of accuracy unknown except in Air Force publicity releases.

That mistake would not have been made by those Americans who in 1943 had to explain to the peoples of the occupied countries the difference between the theory and the practice of precision bombing. In short, these previews of the tactics, the politics and the consequences of the next war overlooked three factors which have in all ages exerted a powerful influence on history—chance, human blunders and human inefficiency.

A Cheap Little War

THE first and greatest blunder was Stalin's; he started the war too soon. To be sure, he intended in 1950 only what the Austrians intended in 1914, a cheap little local war; but that precedent should

Congress Just Can't Turn Itself Off

GALLERY GLIMPSES

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

THE burning question now facing Congress is how to turn itself off.

Senate Democratic leaders spent hours last week trying to decide how to do it, but never did find a convincing answer.

With only a few weeks left to campaign, legislators to a man want to return home for just a few handshakes before the election score's in. But only a small minority dare to say so publicly. A few who've voiced a plaintive wish for adjournment have been promptly slapped down in hot letters from the home folks telling them to stay on the job.

What the Senate in particular is seeking is a way to adjourn without seeming to adjourn. That's why the Senate Democratic Policy Committee voted last week to hold token meetings every three days or even to recess until after the election.

Trouble is, it takes action by both Houses to shut Congress up, and House leaders aren't yet ready to go along with the neat Senate formula.

Speaker Sam Rayburn is holding out for a conventional sine die adjournment when and if Congress finishes with all pressing business. He might settle for a long recess, however.

No Playing Possum

WHAT happened to one legislator, who voiced merely a dreamy desire to return home, illustrates the congressional dilemma.

Representative A. Sidney Camp (D., Ga.) writes a homey news letter to constituents every week. The other day he got to yearning for "muscadines, persimmons, possum and taters."

He sat down and wrote Georgia's Fourth District voters that he sure did hope Congress would adjourn soon, so he could join neighbors in this favorite diet.

For a week afterward angry letters poured into Camp's office admonishing the Georgian to stop thinking about possum and such while there's a war going on, and to stick on the job in Washington.

Camp immediately got a reply off to constituents apologizing for his rash wistfulness.

"The radio somewhere said something about my statement," complained the Congressman. "I do not know whether the radio quoted me correctly or not . . . but anyway I have received a lot of letters to the effect Congress should not adjourn at all . . .

"I have urged the Congress to remain here in session until all needed legislation has been enacted."

But Camp couldn't quite get those lush Georgia delicacies off his mind.

"If I do not get home in time to eat muscadines, persimmons, possum and taters, I guess I will survive," he wrote, "but I certainly will miss some favorites of mine."

One Wire Too Many

NEW HAMPSHIRE bookies last week were giving 8 to 5 odds on the renomination of Senator Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.) despite a stranger-than-fiction campaign being waged against him, or perhaps because of it.

Tobey, outspoken member of the Senate's small GOP liberal wing, curiously found himself running against the publisher of the State's biggest newspaper, rather than his actual opponent, Wesley Powell, former administrative assistant to Senator Styles Bridges.

William Loeb, publisher of the Manchester Morning Union, and associated with Alfred Kohlberg in the Nationalist China lobby, has been pelting Tobey daily in his news and editorial columns. At the same time, he's been doing all he could to aid Bridges' alter ego, Wes Powell.

Recently Loeb set out to discredit an advertisement published by Tobey, quoting nice things said about him by leading colleagues in the Senate. Tobey had carefully refrained from saying they "indorsed" him.

Traditionally, most Senators fight shy of "indorsing" even good friends in a primary campaign. Chief reason is this: If their friend is defeated they are certain to have a new enemy in the Senate's exclusive club.

Loeb promptly sent wires to Tobey's Senate friends asking if they intended to "indorse" Tobey.

Several of them wavered. Senator Leverett Saltonstall (R., Mass.) wired Loeb that "any indorsement is without my authority."

Loeb published Saltonstall's telegram under the caption, "Another Tobey Fraud," and ran this banner on his newspaper: "Saltonstall Repudiates Tobey."

A later wire from Saltonstall said he intended to emphasize he was taking no part in the primary, but it received little play.

Senator Homer Capehart (R., Ind.), another who had praised Tobey, wired Loeb that what he said about the Senator was merely "senatorial and gentlemanly courtesy," and he would say the same about Powell.

Still another who had said friendly things about the Senator was H. Alexander Smith (R., N. J.). Senator Smith wired Loeb that he regretted exceedingly that "my personal letter to Senator Tobey was used in the primary campaign."

The Manchester Union duly published each reply under headlines discrediting the ad.

But Loeb made one mistake. He wired Senator George D. Aiken (R., Vt.) in quest of another Tobey kickback. What Loeb received in reply was a stronger indorsement of Tobey than Aiken gave in the first place.

Read Aiken's reply:

"Senator Tobey has fought shoulder to shoulder with me for the St. Lawrence development, REA and low-cost power for New England. He stood by me when the Federal Administration tried to get control over the farmers of America.

"He has consistently fought for better health and education, better living conditions for low income and working people and other measures I have stood for. His exposure of 'charitable trusts' has resulted in a provision in the new tax bill which plugs the loophole through which some corporations escaped taxes.

"His work on the committee to investigate organized crime has already borne fruit and made him powerful enemies."

Aiken added this snapper:

"Although I have no intention of participating in the New Hampshire campaign, you know me well enough to know that I would not turn on Senator Tobey when he is under attack."

New Airlift Born of War in Korea

By Ralph W. Davis

FAIRFIELD-SUISUN AIR FORCE BASE, Calif.—Born of urgent necessity, one of the great aerial supply operations in history is being carried across the broad Pacific.

The Korean war brought on this sprawling operation, second longest ever organized in aerial military supply. It carries no catchy code name such as "Vittles," "Beetle," or "Swarmer." It is known simply as the Pacific airlift.

It starts from bases and depots scattered across the United States, then encompasses the Pacific. This busy base is the hub.

More than 100 giant transport planes are constantly in the air, strung out across the the Pacific. They are carrying high-priority troops and badly needed supplies to Tokyo for the Korean fighting.

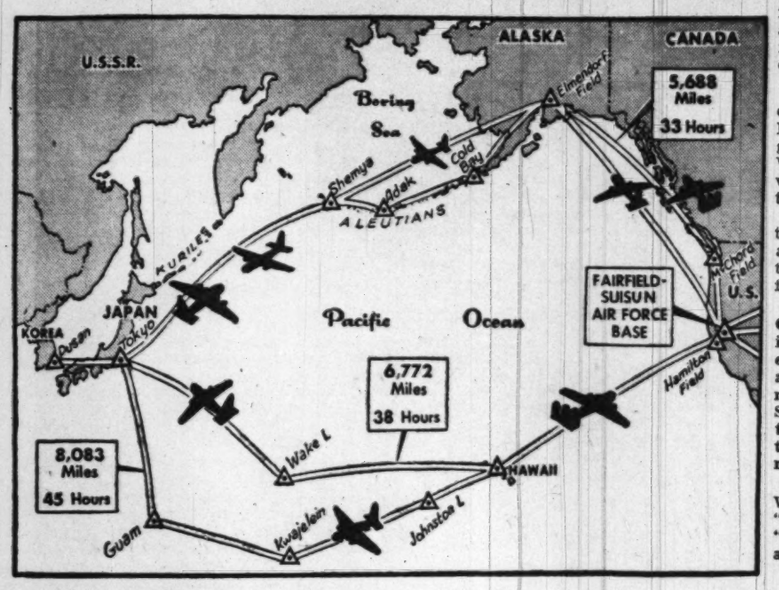
Others are bringing back wounded soldiers, dependents of servicemen sent into combat, captured enemy weapons, combat films and damaged equipment.

The Military Air Transport Service (MATS), the first working example of unification at the lower levels, is organized to carry on the emergency airlift for an indefinite period.

THE FLOW of materiel bound for Korea starts at supply depots throughout the country—at Middletown, Pa.; Dayton, Ohio; Macon, Ga.; Mobile, Ala.; San Antonio, Tex.; Ogden, Utah. Dispatched to the Sacramento, Calif., air materiel area, it is funneled through Fairfield-Suisun.

From this base, supplies and men are carried over three routes, by both MATS and private airline planes.

One route, the shortest, follows the Great Circle. Leaving here, it heads for McChord Field, near Tacoma, Wash., on to Anchorage, Alaska, then out across the Aleutian chain to Shemya, and finally to the airfields near Tokyo. The distance is 5688 miles. Flying time is 33 hours.



Both military craft and commercial planes fly the northern route—with some of the flights terminating at McChord Field. However, most of the planes start from Fairfield-Suisun.

Some fly a mid-Pacific route that carries them out to bases around Honolulu. Commercial planes go on to Wake Island, then to Tokyo, taking them 6772 miles and 38 hours.

The military craft leave Hawaii for Johnston Island, Kwajelein, Guam and Tokyo—a total of 8083 miles. Flying time is 45 hours.

Supplies are split about 50-50 between the northern and mid-Pacific routes. Most of the troops, however, are carried on the southern flights. That's because of the cold weather in the North Pacific.

These troops are practically ready to go into battle as they embark here. They climb aboard the planes, even the plush commercial airliners, fully equipped for combat, including helmets and rifles.

THE MEN who head MATS are veterans of air transport service. Brig. Gen. Henry C. Kristofferson arrived at Fairfield-Suisun August 22 to take over as commander of the West Coast transportation task force (provisional) of MATS. His job is to coordinate the airlift program on the West Coast.

Until August 16, his 45th birthday, Kristofferson was Pacific division operations manager of Pan American Airlines. While with the company, the general flew several airlift flights.

Within six days after his call to active duty, General Kristofferson had flown to Washington, D. C., to confer with Maj. Gen. Laurence S. Kuter, commanding officer of MATS, and Brig. Gen. William Tunner, deputy commander in charge of operations; had visited San Antonio, Tex., headquarters for the continental division of MATS, for a more detailed briefing, and had taken over his command.

General Kristofferson, a native of Tacoma, Wash., was one of the pioneers of the famed "Hump" operation which supplied General "Vinegar Joe" Stillwell's troops in China and Burma nearly 10 years ago.

One of his righthand men here, Lieut. Col. William W. Jones, who commands the 1704th Army Transport Group, is another veteran flier. Colonel Jones was in at the start of the project "Beetle," which brought about the reestablishing of Alaskan bases. He has been commanding officer of the transport group since May, 1949. During the war, he flew B-24 bombers in the European theater.

Combat-ready troops board a chartered airliner at Fairfield-Suisun for the 38-to-45-hour flight to Tokyo

COLONEL JONES says the Pacific airlift is 30 times more difficult from the distance-time standpoint than the famed lift to Berlin—Operation "Vittles." First place in point of distance went to the lift operated to China in World War II. However, that operation was not nearly the size of the present airlift.

The colonel, a native of Dublin, Texas, said the initial problems encountered by airlift officers after the Korean outbreak were shortages of personnel, equipment and ground handling implements. However, the MATS planes soon were aided by commercial craft. Seven days after the outbreak of hostilities, the first commercial plane was winging its way to Tokyo.

Presently, 58 commercial planes are making the trans-Pacific flights. They were provided through contracts by the Government with the following commercial carriers:

Pan American, Northwest, United, Transocean, Seaboard and Western, Flying Tigers, Overseas National, TWA, Alaskan Airlines and Sabea Airlines (a Belgian commercial line).

MATS USES three types of planes—all leaving Fairfield-Suisun with minimum loads on the long haul to Hawaii, and building up in the later and shorter hops.

A C-54 Skymaster starts out with 8000 pounds of cargo or 35 passengers. A C-74 Globemaster takes off with 26,000 pounds of cargo or 50 passengers; a C-97A Stratofreighter with 21,000 pounds of freight or 50 passengers.

Each carries a crew of five: the pilot, copilot, navigator, radio operator and engineer. Of course, that swells a bit sometimes.

When they land at Hawaii, they are under the jurisdiction and are the responsibility of MATS' Pacific divison—headed by Rear Admral William G. Tomlinson.

MATS is a globe circling outfit. The Pacific and European divisions actually meet at Kharan, Saudi Arabia.

The Army has a priority system for shipping—priority one, two, three, four, etc. Practically all the materiel and men aboard the airlift planes are priority one. But none is treated any better than the wounded flown back from Korea.

A Flight Into Fantasy With 1960 'Historian'

have warned him. With his flock of satellites, his gaggle of Quislings in the democratic nations, he had too many plates in the air at once; when he spun a single one out of the circle it was inevitable that some of the others would crash.

And it must have been an irresistible temptation to the Politburo when they discovered that a considerable number of men on Capitol Hill would insist that the United States must not win a war unless Chiang Kai-shek and General Franco could win it, too. With Congress apparently determined to disrupt the anti-aggression alliances that had been put together with such difficulty, it is no wonder that the men in the Kremlin felt that now was the time.

Yet if they had had the self-abnegation to leave the conquest of the world to their successors, it might have been undertaken 20 years later with better prospects of success. There was always the hope that the nerve of the democracies could not endure a perpetual (and costly) standing on the alert; and there was the certainty that by that time Russia would have a considerable supply of atomic bombs.

But there may have been internal pressures in their empire which convinced them that the democracies could wait it out better than they could; and —even members of the Politburo being human—they may have felt, as Hitler had felt, that they had better have the war while they could run it themselves and make sure it came out right.

EVEN SO, they might have waited at least until 1952, when the United States would be more than usually convulsed by a Presidential election. For without the intrusion in the meantime of an especially menacing foreign crisis, it was fairly certain that in that election, if McCarthy were not himself a candidate, McCarthyism would be the issue; and the Politburo, fortified by that time with a few more atomic bombs, could have sat back comfortably to watch Americans tearing one another to pieces and saving their enemies the trouble.

Some such idea seems indeed to have been in the back of their minds; but in the meantime Korea looked like something they could get away with quickly and cheaply—a 1938 operation, Austria or the Sudetenland, perhaps the last of the sort that could be attempted safely. The reaction amazed them; they had failed to comprehend the virtues as well as the failings of democracy; they had made the calamitous error of suddenly starting up American rearmament at a time when they themselves had, as yet, so few atomic bombs that they had had to concentrate their propaganda effort on a campaign to outlaw the atomic bomb. Belated consciousness of a blunder made them try to retrieve it by further blunders; and so in due time, partly by mistakes and partly by mischance, the war was on.

The war was on and the whole free world, going through this ordeal for the third time in a generation, was praying to whatever gods it recognized not only for victory, but for a victory which at last would settle something. To say that devout Marxist-Leninist-Stalinists were at the same time praying to dialectical materialism would of course be a crudely anthropomorphic simplification; but members of the Politburo undoubtedly went through a series of emotional stages which amounted to the same thing. As in every war, the prayers of both could not be answered; as in almost every war, the prayers of neither have been answered fully.

THE COURSE of military events is too recent and too familiar to need recapitulation here; except to note certain aspects of the use and the consequences of the atomic bomb that were unforeseen by the apocalyptic previewers. It had apparently been the hope of the Russians that we would turn world sentiment against us by indiscriminate bombing of populations; or else that in fear of such a reaction we would hesitate to use the bomb at all. Its prompt and effective employment for certain semitactical purposes soon caused them considerable military embarrassment and promised considerable political embarrassment.

But none of its targets was entirely remote from inhabited areas; not all the populations involved heeded our broadcast warnings to get out of the way; so, inevitably, a certain number of civilians were killed.

Soviet reaction to that was easily predictable. Their tremendous propaganda machine immediately began shrieking about the barbarism of the Wall Street cannibals; they insisted that the whole world was convulsed with horror; they said that so loudly and so continually that—as had often happened in peacetime—the men in the Kremlin ended by believing their own story. (Plato had noted, long before, that the one fatally disastrous error for a totalitarian government would be to deceive itself about the nature of reality; and had failed to realize that this is an error into which totalitarian governments must almost inevitably fall.) So it was decided to use the Kremlin's handful of atomic bombs against American cities, "in retaliation."

HAD THIS been done without warning on June 25, the damage might have been immense. But the Korean war, the early stages of the general war, had given time for the organization of a defense which would have been far from adequate against a mass attack, but was by no means negligible when raids must be few and small. Of the seven or eight atomic bombs intended for American targets, two or three did considerable damage, but not the damage they had been intended to do.

The first one, aimed at Washington, overshot the city in the darkness (the plane that carried it flying at high altitude and being under attack from interceptors) and hit the outskirts of Alexandria; its principal achievement was the destruction of that Masonic Temple which is one of the less fortunate memorials to George Washington.

The bomb that hit Chicago killed thousands of people, but it was intended, not for Chicago but for the Gary steel mills; but thanks to a combination of darkness, a heavy thunderstorm and the activity of interceptor planes, the bomb was dropped by grave mischance right on the Chicago Tribune Tower, which was reduced to radiant ruins. Col. Robert R. McCormick, warned in time, was safe in his underground shelter; but he emerged too soon, in confidence that no European radiations could harm the hero of Cantigny, and disintegrated within two weeks.

All in all, the Russian attack did considerable damage and killed many people, but nothing like so much damage, or so much slaughter, as had been predicted not only by fiction writers but by scientists who had taken into account every factor except chance and inefficiency.

IT MUST NOT be supposed that inaccuracy was a prerogative of the enemy. Our bombers, operating from European bases against nearby targets, had usually hit what they were aiming at or hit close enough to it. But the Russian raids brought an irresistible demand for retaliation: our air command finally had to send a number of planes, manned by volunteers, on one-way strategic bombing missions into the heart of Eurasia; and it is now known that most of them hit nothing but the landscape—though one or two had such striking success as to make up for all failures.

But that is a familiar story; a literary magazine may properly note some unforeseen consequences of Russian atomic bombing whose full extent cannot yet be estimated.

There came a time when the Kremlin had only one atomic bomb left; and as the European ground operations were by no means going as planned, it was decided to use that one in Europe. But where in Europe? Antwerp, the principal port of entry for American supplies? London, the heart—as always—of European resistance? Either might have been a profitable target. But the Kremlin, always inclined to stress the moral and psychological imponderables (and often misjudging them), concluded that the vigorous campaign for neutrality among French intellectuals might be promoted by dropping a bomb on Paris—the right part of Paris.

It had been intended to drop it on the Place de la Concorde; but thanks once more to chance, weather and interception, the bomb exploded above the confluence of the Boulevards Montparnasse and Raspail, where it incinerated so many intellectuals as to end the campaign for neutrality.

IT IS THE EFFECT of that bomb on American culture, however, which here concerns us. Since the Ninth War ended, the young American intellectual who wants to get away from it all has no place to go. His traditional refuge is now dust and ashes—radioactive ashes, at that; and the secondary favorite, the lotus lands of the South Pacific, had already been debunked by the war of 1942-45.

Some of these would-be expatriates are still hunting for a substitute for Montparnasse, in a world where no place is any longer far enough away from any place else; but an increasing number of them seem to be resigned to staying at home and trying to make the best of it.

Still more significant has been another effect of the Russian atomic attack on American culture. It is impossible for anyone who never lived in New York before 1950 to appreciate the sequence of emotions—bewilderment, then blank stupefaction, and at last a paralyzing humiliation—that beset its inhabitants as they gradually realized that they were not only safe but ignored; that an enemy with only a few atomic bombs had not thought it was worthwhile to waste one on New York.

They had expected it, they had read harrowing stories of what it would be like, they had prepared and braced themselves to meet it; and then nobody bothered with them. To the innumerable New Yorkers who had always supposed that Manhattan Island was the mid-navel of the earth, this was a shattering blow; and especially to those who were on the whole the most dynamic element in New York, the immigrants from the interior who had come there in that belief. Dazed, confused, confuted, in recent years more and more of them have been moving out, going back where they came from.

BROOKLYN, already twice as populous as Manhattan, has become still more preponderant with this exodus from the smaller island, and preponderant in more than numbers. It begins to seem that what "New York" had meant to American culture and world culture for a century before 1950 is likely to be replaced by the somewhat different cultural values of Brooklyn; with eventual consequences which no man can now foresee.

So at last the Ninth World War was won. Even more truly than the Eighth it was a war for survival; plenty of people are now pointing out that survival is not enough, but it was the first and indispensable necessity. Those who complain of the complexity of postwar problems should remember that the dead have no problems, nor the conquered.

It is obviously desirable to strengthen the world organization, if we can; but the anti-Russian coalition of the fifties, like the anti-German coalition of the forties, was held together by fear; it is not yet certain how much international cooperation we can get when there is nothing to fear immediately, nor how soon an effective organization could be put together when there is something to fear once more. As, someday, there will be.

WHERE IT WILL come from no one can now predict. Stalin and Molotov are dead, but Vishinsky is getting rich out of his memoirs being published in several American newspapers—his theme being, of course, "I Was Always Secretly a Menshevik." The Marxist mythology has been discredited, the Comintern has been destroyed; but plenty of the fragments of both survive as fragments of Fascism survived the Eighth War.

Scientific progress had not yet advanced sufficiently, this time, to leave the whole world poisoned with radioactivity; but another poison lingers—an evil knowledge, the knowledge of the Leninist technique of seizing and retaining power, which could be picked up and put into practice by any group that could escape notice for a few years.

There survives also the nature of Man, who is sometimes sinful; and more often, and more calamitously, is stupid . . . But who also has his glimmers of intelligence and of self-denying good will. Those glimmers have been enough to save us, just barely, from catastrophe, so far; they may do so again.

The morning cometh, and also the night; if ye will inquire, inquire ye.

Korean Hat Customs Guard Against Plot

THE Koreans' traditional habit of wearing many and varied hats is said to have had its origin as a measure against plotting, notes the National Geographic Society. An ancient ruler, the legend goes, once concluded that men could not conspire if they could not put their heads together. Hence he required his subjects to wear such huge hats that whispered conversations could not be carried on.

'War' Talk Here Frets Europeans

By J. J. Servan-Schreiber

Correspondent for Le Monde of Paris.

PARIS.—Only now in Europe is it possible to start measuring the psychological impact of the American debate on "preventive war." That impact is considerable.

It is easy for any foreign observer in Paris, London or Bonn to tend to minimize it, because the official voices and even the responsible press have been careful to avoid public discussion of it. But it forms the nucleus of most private political conversations.

Indeed, last week the problem reached the level of a major political factor in at least three instances.

In Paris, the matter has been discussed openly among cabinet ministers. After Secretary Matthew's speech, the French Ambassador in Washington was ordered to ask for a restatement of policy by the American Administration. Now the French government thinks the matter is getting out of the control of even the Administration, and is attempting to evaluate the prospects in the running battle of influence that is going to take place in the United States.

IN BONN, the debate on German rearmament between the Christian and the Socialist parties on the one hand, and the government and the public on the other, has been considerably altered by the preventive war talks in the United States.

One apparent symptom has been the resignation of Interior Secretary Heoinemann, morally supported by several of his cabinet colleagues. Also, it is known that the Socialist leader, Kurt Schumacher, is now reconsidering his support of the government's policy toward the United States in view of new doubts about American intentions.

Finally, in London, the current general congress of the Trade Unions Congress is jeopardized by the number of unions intending to support peace appeals, moral condemnation of the A-bomb, etc., a trend that has been greatly increased by the preventive war talk.

To summarize the situation, it can be said that Europe today is going through a psychological crisis second only to the one that took place in the two days between the Red aggression in Korea and the Truman decision to send American forces. In fact, part of the considerable confidence in America that was built up here by the Truman decision is in danger of being drowned by the new uncertainty on the American attitude toward general war.

UNDOUBTEDLY these European reactions may appear to the American public to be grossly exaggerated, or based on a misunderstanding. To any American it might well seem clear that:

1. President Truman, in his recent statement, entirely and officially dismissed the concept of preventive war.

2. The American democracy is, by nature, incapable of launching cold-bloodedly a preventive attack on Russia.

No responsible European would seriously question these two facts. But the problem is not as simple as that. If it were, only the Communists would speak about the danger of an American "preventive" war.

The real problem lies rather in the differences of interpretation of what constitutes a "preventive war" in the present international situation. And the true danger is that European and American public opinion might very well differ in the near future in their respective interpretations. If that time is allowed to come, then the gravest political consequences must be feared.

SUPPOSE that in a year or two the Soviets have succeeded in multiplying the number of local, limited, indirect wars. Suppose that American forces are fighting not only in Korea but also in Formosa, Yugoslavia and Berlin. Suppose that there are internal Communist uprisings in Iran, Greece, Indonesia, Italy, still with no direct Russian intervention but with obvious Russian material help and leadership. Then what?

Then the people who today are a minority in advocating direct struggle with Russia might conceivably become predominant. And it might be also that they would be right. Who can say that a final showdown with the Kremlin would not be both physically and morally healthier than an exhausting running battle all over the world for years and years, transforming our democracies into semi-Fascist war camps?

Still, if that time came, then it could be predicted that the danger of political divorce between Europe and America would be very real, leading to a falling apart of the Atlantic community. What America might, at that time, consider a "defensive" attack on Russia, Europe, looking merely to its own physical preservation, might consider an unnecessary "preventive" one, and might disassociate itself from the American action. In other words, it might remain neutral.

Today, that prospect has already led to the considerable psychological "malaise" we are witnessing in Paris, London, Rome and Bonn. If one thing then is urgent, it is for a central planning staff, composed of both Americans and Europeans, to determine clearly a common foreign policy.

A Preacher-Politician Gives Sen. Brewster a Bad Moment

press was called into interview the red-haired preacher. Senator Owen Brewster, chairman of the GOP Senatorial Committee, sat at his side, but the stage was turned over to Alexander.

The GOP's nominee for the Senate rose glibly to the occasion, discussed not only Oklahoma politics but national and world issues. Then he took a cold plunge into the whole field of Republican national policies. Brewster looked a little nervous.

Alexander was covering a lot of ground when he accused the Administration of hopeless "incompetence" in conducting the war, and reporters asked him to get down to cases.

"I'll name you an incompetent," he said.

Reporters didn't bat an eye. Republicans have been singling out Secretary of State Dean Acheson as the scapegoat for so long that it isn't news any more.

But Alexander didn't name Acheson. He put his finger instead on Secretary of War Louis Johnson, a particular friend of Brewster's.

There was a moment of complete silence, then Brewster burst out:

"I'm not defending any Democrats," he said. "My job is to elect Republicans. Louie can take care of himself."

BEN H. GUILL, the Pampa (Tex.) Republican Congressman, whose election to the seat of Representative Eugene Worley jolted the Solid South last spring, is going to try to do the impossible again in November.

Guill is making a unique Republican appeal for the Texas Eighteenth District Democratic vote.

"Why elect an anti-Administration Democrat?" he tells the voters. "If you are opposed to the Administration, you ought to vote for a Republican, who can do something about it."

Actually, Guill's House record is far more liberal than votes cast by most old-line Southern Democrats. Walter Rogers, the anti-Truman Democrat nominated to run against him, stands even to the right of the Dixiecrat lineup, is more conservative than most Republicans.

"Someday the South is bound to find out that Republicans more nearly represent its views," says Guill.

Guill is a Navy veteran who fought in seven amphibious landings in World War II. Friends urged him to launch a personal attack against his opponent, who saw no war service, but Guill ruled that out.

"You see, he comes from my home town (Pampa) and even lives in the same block I do," said the Texas Republican. "Besides that, he married the girl I used to go with."

The Draft Boss Likes Civvies —On Himself

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

HISTORY WILL probably remember Maj. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey longer than the Hershey who put almonds into chocolate bars. The general put 10,110,104 Americans into khaki, and after the war he ran the Selective Service records, keeping a finger on more than 44 million Americans.

For 14 years he has first organized, then operated, then mothballed, then reorganized the system by which millions of young Americans have shared the task of defending this Nation. He looks like a general, he talks like a general; blind in one eye, from a polo accident, he has the skeptical squint of a general—but he wears civilian clothes.

"Sure I do, always! Only my wife can talk me into wearing a uniform, and even she can't do it very often. I am retired and in the active reserve, and as head of this agency I can decide what we wear. No uniforms!

"Why not? Hell, look at it this way: In civvies, I can walk into any hash house and buy a 25-cent sandwich for only two bits. But suppose I walked into the same joint with two shining stars on my shoulders. You can bet your life that same 25-cent sandwich would cost me half a buck!"

(Aside: As he talked, he reached out one foot, hooked his toe under the drawer of his desk, pulled out the drawer, cocked both feet on its edge—and we could see that even though he wears no uniform, his socks are GI khaki.)

BORN ON A FARM in Steuben County, Ind., 57 years ago Tuesday, Hershey first wore a uniform in the National Guard in 1911. "I didn't join the Guard to see the world—all I wanted to see was Indianapolis! Didn't even know there was a war on, and the next thing I knew, I was in Mexico.

"Got myself elected a second lieutenant—yeah, elected. That's how it worked in the Guard 35 years ago. I got myself a good campaign manager who knew the ropes, and ran against two other fellers . . . won on the eighth ballot. You know, people raised in Indiana aren't exactly amateurs in politics."

Probing for a violent reaction, easy to get from Hershey, we asked him why we got caught flat-footed and short-handed in Korea. General Hershey blasts those who stymied universal military training. "I can remember the critics of UMT who used to say there was no need for peacetime training: 'Sure, we may be a Nation of civilians, but just let war come, and watch. Whoosh! We will spring to arms!'

"Well, the time has come. Where's the 'whoosh?'

"THE REASON we're drafting only 50,000 this month is because the armed forces just cannot assimilate any more. The teachers

Demobilization was in full cry when General Hershey, then in uniform, made this plea to a Senate committee for continuation of the draft we would need to handle more new trainees are today out in Korea, fighting!

"If we had trained reserves, if UMT had been operating for the past five years . . . but there's no use talking about that now.

"Mind you, I don't say that total war is inevitable even now. But peace is a long way from inevitable, too.

"The trouble with us is that the only time we fight for peace is when we are at war. Peace isn't just 'no-war.' Peace is something you have to fight for to keep.

"We treat peace like a crap game—and we always play with the other fellow's dice!"

BACK HOME in Indiana, General Hershey's father was town sheriff. "And that's how I got a job as deputy sheriff to help pay my way through college.

"Our house was divided into two parts. The front was where the family lived and the back was the jail. There was a door between our living room and the jail, and it was my job to see to it that door stayed locked!"

As he talked, General Hershey was tightening the tiny screw at the corner of his glasses with a pocket knife, and he would punctuate his sentences with an extra hard jab at the stubborn screw.

"Many's the time I'd be studying in class at school, when somebody from the town would tiptoe in and tap me on the shoulder and whisper: 'You gotta come make an arrest, Lew.'"

Hershey taught school while he studied at Tri-State College. "Another feller had the title of principal, but I ran the school; all 12 grades. Today one of my pupils from that school is the clerk of the draft board in my home town."

GENERAL HERSHEY has a stern verdict on college education: "There's nothing sacred about a college degree. And another thing, I've always said no college ever taught a man how to survive in war; I have always said we need universal military training. But you can't even talk to more than one professor in 10 about mobilization.

"Oh, I know, there are a lot of very smart men who think there are more important things to learn in college than survival. I remember sitting on a platform at a college, getting one of those 'ornery' degrees, along with Gov. Charley Edison and the feller from over at Chase National Bank, Aldrich, Winthrop Aldrich. Edison got up to make a speech and he really lit into us for grabbing too many future scientists into the Army. Good speaker—gave us hell!

"At home that night, I wondered, 'Why didn't I ask Charley if his father, Thomas A. Edison, needed a college education?'

"Dammit, you always think of the best argument after the debate is over . . ."

Blunt Tongue Has Hurt Truman Before

By Edward T. Folliard

Post Reporter

PRESIDENT TRUMAN, a man with "bounce," was talking to veterans of the Marine Corps League at the Statler.

"There are incidents, sometimes," he said, "that appear to be almost the end of the world when they happen, that usually turn out for the good of the cause."

What was in Mr. Truman's mind? Was he thinking of the so-called Vinson episode? Was it of the time he dedicated an airfeld, and eulogized the wrong person—a boy instead of a girl? Was it some of the memorable remarks of that same exciting year, the "red-herring" phrase or the "I like old Joe (Stalin)" crack?

All of these had a startling impact during the campaign of 1948. Some were regarded as appalling blunders, which seemingly made Mr. Truman's defeat all the more certain. Yet the loser was not Mr. Truman, but the candidate whose tongue slipped only once to form the awful words, "lunatic engineer."

IT MAY BE that Mr. Truman was thinking of times long before his White House days. As a boy, he wanted to go to West Point. It probably did seem like "the end of the world" when he found out that he couldn't because of his eyes. Later, there was another bitter setback, the failure of his haberdashery store in the 1920s, after his service in World War I.

If he had gone to West Point, however, or if he had succeeded in business, he might never have got into politics. And in that case, of course, he would not have become President and brought on the furor he did last week with his intemperate remarks about the Marine Corps.

The former Marines gathered at the Statler did more than forgive Mr. Truman for saying that their old outfit was the "Navy's police force" and had "a propaganda machine almost equal to Stalin's." They gave him a medal and cheered him for his courage in apologizing by letter and then appearing before them.

How other Americans will react is a question that only time can answer.

THE RECORD shows, however, that Mr. Truman has amazing comeback power. It shows, also, that his political foes have made some serious miscalculations when they thought he was "down."

His political stock was terribly low in 1946, when the Republicans captured the Eightieth Congress. The election was hardly over, however, when he took on John L. Lewis and beat him in the courts. This brought back much of his lost prestige.

In the spring of '48, he was down again. There was serious doubt that he could win the Democratic nomination for a full, four-year term; the Roosevelt boys and others had started a "dump-Truman" movement. At the Philadelphia convention, Mr. Truman electrified the delegates with a fighting speech, and then went on to win the election—using the Republican-dominated Eightieth Congress as his No. 1 issue.

GRANTING that Mr. Truman has a lot of bounce, what baffles many people is how he makes his mistakes to start with. How, they ask, could he have written such a letter as he did about the Marines to Representative McDonough, a California Republican, on August 29?

The answer at the White House may not be very satisfying, but here it is:

He knew McDonough and for that reason wrote him personally in reply to a letter the Congressman had sent him a short time before. He did not expect that McDonough would make the letter public, even though the Californian is a member of the opposition party.

Yes, but what led him to use such intemperate language? The answer has come in part from Mr. Truman himself. He has explained that he was "disturbed" by the large number of letters that had been pouring in on him, which, like McDonough's, asked that the Marines be given the same representation on the Joint Chiefs of Staff as the Army, Navy and Air Force.

Mr. Truman was not merely disturbed, he was angry. Having spent years bringing about unification of the armed forces, he apparently thought he ought to be spared agitation for any further changes at a time like this.

And so he hauled off and dictated the sizzler to McDonough. It was a grievous mistake, one that caused him a good deal of anguish when it came to light, and one which he went to unprecedented lengths to correct.

LIKE MOST people, Mr. Truman has written letters and then torn them up. But he has also let some hot ones get into the mails.

Some of them have never been made public, including an angry missive he sent to Bernard M. Baruch during the 1948 campaign. One that did get out was a letter to Senator Charles W. Tobey, New Hampshire Republican, in the spring of 1946.

Tobey had written to the President about the food situation in New England, and said he was making a "Macedonian cry." This derived from the Biblical passage: "And a vision appeared to Paul in the night; there stood a man of Macedonia, and prayed him, saying, come over into Macedonia, and help us."

President Truman, angry with Tobey because he had fought the nomination of Edwin Pauley to be Undersecretary of the Navy, wrote him a sharp reply.

"It seems to me," he said, "that you have been making Macedonian cries or yells ever since I have been in the White House. For what reason I never could understand."

He scolded Tobey for lining up with Harold Ickes to block Pauley, and said that he would like to talk about the whole food situation "when you have reached a cooling-off period."

He signed the letter "Harry," and wrote in the corner in longhand, "Come and see me."

MR. TRUMAN'S penchant for blunt language was shown in 1944, when he was running for the Vice Presidency. In a speech in Providence, R. I., he took an oblique crack at Senator David I. Walsh, Massachusetts Democrat. He said that there was no difference between Walsh and certain Republican isolationists, "except that Walsh has two years to serve and we have a chance to reform him."

Walsh was furious. Democratic strategists were afraid Mr. Truman's remark might cost the party Massachusetts, and President Roosevelt went out of his way to patch things up with the Senator. In the end, the Roosevelt-Truman ticket carried the State by a little over 100,000 votes. Walsh was defeated two years later by Henry Cabot Lodge, jr., a Republican.

Mr. Truman detests communism and all it stands for, but he has never retracted the statement he made in a speech at Eugene, Oreg., in 1948: "I like old Joe. He's a decent fellow, but he's a prisoner of the Politburo . . ."

The truth of the matter seems to be that the President really did take a shine to Stalin at Potsdam, the only time the two were together.

There is a certain amount of mystery about the "red herring" expression. It came out of a White House news conference which was held August 5, 1948. What happened was that a reporter asked Mr. Truman if he thought that the so-called spy investigation on Capitol Hill was a "red herring" to divert attention from the failure of the Eightieth Congress to act on high prices and other problems. Mr. Truman said he did, and the news went out that he had called the investigation a red herring.

None of the regular White House reporters is able to remember now who it was that asked the question.

At any rate, it is noticed now that Mr. Truman frequently cautions reporters not to try to put words in his mouth.

U. S. Making Inroads Among Satellites

By Edwin D. Gritz

Post Reporter

AN UNPUBLICIZED meeting of East German Reds and Moscow strategists last winter produced the following boast from Foreign Minister Andrei Y. Vishinsky:

"We shall conquer the world, not with atom bombs, but with something which the Americans cannot produce—our brains, our ideas, our doctrines."

To the Kremlin at that time, the road to world conquest was never clearer.

Since then, however, the Soviet Union has run into an outbreak of anti-Stalinism. European observers call it the average man's "personal revolution" against Russia's expansionism.

The Kremlin's concern about this became particularly apparent when Vishinsky felt obliged to hold many hasty conferences throughout the Soviet orbit during the late spring and summer. And on at least two occasions, at Bucharest and more recently at Czechoslovakia's Karlovy Vary (Karlsbad), Vishinsky found the satellites seeking specific Soviet commitments against the west's mounting ideological and military power.

UNLIKE the Soviet Union, where brute force and deception have kept Stalinism supreme, the satellites have not won even passive loyalty from many of their citizens. Compounding this weakness are the unexpected after-effects of recent widespread political purges.

Reports from abroad reveal that many expurgated Communists, who were found too cool for Stalinism, are banding together as "true Marxists." While politically identical with Titoism, these new groups regard themselves as allies rather than followers of Tito.

Like Tito, their avowed aim is to make Communist states independent of Soviet control and nationally coequal. They declare themselves opposed to the Soviet emphasis on violence, subscribing instead to the "unadulterated" Marxist precept that "the victorious proletariat cannot impose any kind of order on another people without undermining its own victory."

TWO SUCH GROUPS, meeting in Paris and Duesseldorf recently, drew an immediate attack from the Bolshevists. "Bankrupt politians, full of morbid ambitions," cried the Stalinists, adding that these "alleged Marxists" are even willing to throw in their lot with the Anglo-Americans to undermine the Soviet Union.

More distressing than that, however, is the fact that America is winning important rank and file support on the Continent by recognizing Soviet imperialism as its enemy—not the Russian people, not communism, and not socialism, so long as each strives for peace and freedom.

To many Europeans, whose political beliefs are as varied as they are intense, this is an acceptable invitation to side with America rather than hope to escape Soviet terrorism in neutrality. And it is this Bolshevist immorality, not the fear of communism or the appeal of capitalism, which is swaying the citizens of Europe as well as Asia.

UNTIL RECENTLY, America had not been able to reach any significant number of these people with the motives behind the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Defense Pact. It is no secret, for example, that French and Italian officials took only token measures to counteract Soviet propaganda with the truth about American aid.

Now that the State Department, ECA and the Atlantic Pact nations all have embarked on bigger information efforts, the Kremlin is reacting with bigger promises punctuated by warnings to its people.

A Pravda editorial several weeks ago contained the following typical Moscow reaction:

"In the capitalist world . . . the reactionary bourgeoisie and its lackeys, the right-wing socialists, are doing their utmost to poison the minds of the masses with the feeling of mad hatred, to develop the lowest instincts."

This is not to say that the Politburo has idealistically renounced force as a means of forwarding Bolshevism. But though the Soviet Union is well prepared for either aggressive or defensive war, the Politburo is simply realistic about the risk of mutual destruction in any atomic conflict. As for much of its current saber-rattling, informed Europeans regard this as an expression of fear and insecurity.

THEN TOO, despite the Soviet Union's appearance of solidarity, Soviet leaders cannot be too certain of the support they would receive in war—unless, of course, they can create and maintain the illusion that the war is defensive.

The Kremlin is undoubtedly mindful of the mass desertions which marked the beginning of the last war. German war documents, for example, show that more than two million Russians laid down their arms at the approach of German troops in the summer of 1941.

These and other studies reveal that it was not communism or Stalin which later galvanized the Russians into a heroic, triumphant force. It was, instead, loyalty to Mother Russia—and the universal will to fight pillage and inhumanity such as the Nazis brought to Russia.

They Literally Take The World's Pulse

By Frank Carey

A GROUP OF MEN in the Commerce Department Building here literally have their fingers on the pulse of the world.

They are the headquarters staff of the Coast and Geodetic Survey's world-wide "information network" for rapid location of earthquakes.

They get reports by fast communication from widely separated stations which report the quake's distance from them. They plot these readings on a huge globe and get the actual location of the earthquake.

An individual station can accurately plot a quake's distance but can only roughly estimate its location. The plotting system, employing "tri-lateration" methods, is required for an accurate "fix."

The quake center is placed at the intersection of imaginary lines drawn from three or more stations on the basis of their distance measurements.

The network's latest and proudest achievement came in locating the earthquake in the extreme northern tip of Burma August 15.

THAT EARTHQUAKE occurred shortly after 9 a. m. (EST). By 1 o'clock in the afternoon, thanks to readings made in Washington, at Harvard University and stations at Sitka, Alaska, and Honolulu, the quake plotters had a pretty good idea that the location was "near the China-Burma border."

"By the following morning," Capt. Elliott Roberts, supervisor of the network, told a reporter, "we had received and plotted readings from 57 stations, including 26 foreign ones. The final result wasn't over 25 miles different from the approximate location we had calculated."

Cooperating in the network are some 75 stations in the United States, including about 30 directly operated by the Coast and Geodetic Survey; two in Alaska; one in Puerto Rico; one in Hawaii, and about 30 in foreign countries. Russia and its satellites make no reports.

All stations employ earthquake-recording instruments known as seismographs. Essentially, a seismograph consists of a rigidly fixed base above which is poised a delicately balanced pendulum. A shock traveling through the earth can be registered on a recording device as the pendulum jiggles.

Seismographs are extremely sensitive. Time was when spiders or insects might get onto the mechanism and cause a "recording." The rumble of a truck outside the seismograph station might set off the instrument, too.

But the newest instruments are sealed against insects and are usually far enough away from commercial traffic to eliminate interference from that source. Experts say that even if a seismograph detects nonquake rumbles, they are readily distinguished.

SEISMOGRAPHS can pick up certain atomic explosions. The first A-bomb test in New Mexico was faintly recorded at Pasadena, Calif., 675 miles away. The New Mexico bomb was exploded about 100 feet above the ground and tore a large crater in the earth.

The underwater burst at Bikini was picked up on the West Coast of the United States—5000 miles away.

Seismologists say that a bomb burst high in the air would be less likely to produce an earth shock detectable on seismographs.

Big 3 Must Rule on German 'Police'

alter the fact that the West is in an exposed position, and will be until it can convert its present military weakness into strength.

APART FROM reaching fundamental decisions on European defense, the Foreign Ministers will have to find a way to use German manpower in the combined western European military effort. High Commissioner John J. McCloy was back in Washington last week, reportedly full of forebodings about Communist efforts to infiltrate western Germany, and about the efficient army being recruited and trained by the Russians in eastern Germany.

There is no present intention in Washington, London or Paris to let western Germany form its own army, under German generalship and the German flag. But there is a greater willingness than before to let the West German government expand its federal police, as a partial guard against trouble from the eastern zone.

And all three capitals, even Paris, are ready to let western Germany provide units for western European armed forces under a combined staff. How it is to be done will depend on how the combined armed forces and the general staff are formed.

Technically, of course, Germany is still in a state of war with the western powers, and it would be legally absurd to seek military help from Germany while this condition continues. Therefore it can be assumed that the Foreign Ministers will instruct their high commissioners in Germany to draft a new occupation statute, ending the state of war and making it possible for Germany to play its part in the defense of all of western Europe.

DEFENSE ACROSS the Atlantic will not be the only problem facing the Foreign Ministers, although it will be the most serious one. Secretary Acheson said last week that the decisions required in New York would be world-wide and unprecedented in their range. In the next four or five weeks, he said, the State Department would be busy with as many big decisions as in 50 years of peacetime.

The most troublesome of them outside Europe will be the future of Formosa, where the United States is increasingly anxious to get the support of many nations for what has been a one-nation policy.

The British, in particular, have had misgivings over the virtual alliance between the United States and Chiang Kai-shek, whom they no longer recognize as a representative of China. Lately their misgivings have dwindled as the United States has proclaimed its desire (1) to keep the island "neutralized" and (2) to have its future settled peacefully.

The United States will ask the British and French to approve these two aims, and then to support the creation of a U. N. commission to consider the future of the island.

The difficulty here is that the United States recognizes Chiang and the British do not; the United States assumes that Chiang will go on governing the island at least until the proposed U. N. commission decides otherwise. Even if it were decided to get rid of Chiang, neither Washington nor London knows how to do it, since the former Generalissimo still commands an estimated 400,000 Nationalist troops on the island.

ON KOREA, there is not much for the three foreign ministers to decide, since the basic decisions have been taken already. But if the future of Korea is to be discussed, Secretary Acheson has committed himself to seek the views of Asian governments on this and other Asian subjects before reaching decisions.

The United States is not anxious to have a public debate in the U. N. on the subject until the defending forces are much nearer the thirty-eighth parallel than they are now.

As for other trouble-spots in the world, such as Indo-China and Iran, it is one of the purposes of these periodic Big Three meetings to let the ministers compare notes, exchange ideas and work out common policies if they can. Certainly this kind of discussion will take place at the coming meetings in New York if the ministers have time for it.

Normally, the three ministers should cooperate well, for they have worked together in friendly harness for almost two years. But each of the three will be under political handicaps that may make agreement more difficult than usual.

SECRETARY ACHESON is still under savage political attack from the Republicans, and will be a sure target in the coming congressional elections. On Far Eastern issues especially he is bound to feel hampered, knowing that almost any compromise he accepts will be attacked and distorted for partisan purposes.

Foreign Secretary Bevin has been ill and away from the British Foreign Office most of the summer, and badly out of touch with events since the Korean war began. Subordinates have taken over his day-to-day work at the Foreign Office, and Prime Minister Attlee, himself overworked and irritable, has been the government's chief spokesman on major foreign problems in the House of Commons. Unless Bevin reaches New York greatly improved in health and spirits, it may be hard for Acheson and Schuman to have a real meeting of minds with him.

As for Schuman, the wisest, gentlest and most reasonable spokesman France has had in two decades, he is hampered by the weakness of his government, by the defeatism that is still too prevalent in France, and by the continued rumors of Communist infiltration into the French armed forces.

Yet none of the three ministers has lacked courage, and none has flinched in past emergencies. If all three are fully awake to the seriousness of the moment, they may yet make their New York meeting a turning point in world affairs.

Far Too Much Work for One General

By Harry N. Stull

ATTENTION HAS BEEN CALLED to the Federation of Citizens Associations' resolution to seek legislation providing for the appointment of a member of the Public Utilities Commission to relieve the Engineer Commissioner from service on that body. This, of course, is no reflection on the efficient officer who now occupies that position, but experience has proved that it is impossible for one man to perform all the duties now required of the Engineer Commissioner.

STULL

Frequently he has conflicting hearings. The assignment of an assistant to serve for him at some of these hearings is not satisfactory to those who appear before these bodies.

When Gen. Gordon Young disqualified himself in a recent Public Utilities hearing because the District Government was seriously involved in the controversy, it was the attempt of an honest man to meet the proprieties of the occasion. It should not have been necessary.

The present Engineer Commissioner, because of the illness or inactivity of civilian members of the board, has had to act as board spokesman, appear frequently before committees of Congress, sit as a member of numerous commissions and boards and still attend to the many engineering problems confronting the District. How much work can we expect one man to do?

THE PASSAGE of time and the complicated international situation accentuates the need for the establishment of a competent civilian defense organization here. The failure of the House to meet the situation makes necessary a determined effort by all civic groups to convince the Senate of the total inadequacy of the $30,000 reluctantly appropriated by the lower House.

Much publicity is being given to the proposed dispersal of certain Government units on the assumption that Washington would be one of the first targets of the enemy. There would still remain many Government agencies and hundreds of thousands of people who would need protection. It is hoped that the House does not regard those of us who remain here as expendable.

It takes time to build up and train a defense organization. Other communities, where money can be spent with the people's consent, have made progress. The District Medical Society (upon whose members a great deal of this work would fall) has petitioned the Senate to appropriate sufficient funds for the purpose. It would be helpful if other organizations took similar action.

IT IS NOTEWORTHY that the citizens of Fairfax County, Va., are to be permitted to decide by referendum what kind of county government they desire. This is the essence of democracy. It is unfortunate that in the Capital of the United States, no similar right is granted to the 800,000 people who reside there.

In the absence of these democratic rights, our people are, in effect, wards of the Federal Government. We must wait until the machinery of the mighty Congress of the United States gets into operation to decide some trivial matter which, in other American cities, would be no more than municipal regulations. In the absence of referendum here, the residents of the District are prevented from deciding that the kind of government we have is not the kind we want.

THE OPENING of school will see the School Safety Patrol again in action. This organization, sponsored by the American Automobile Association with the cooperation of police, has been in existence 30 years. It now numbers more than half a million children throughout the country. Service in this organization has taught its members responsibility, which will lead to future community leadership. It has instilled safety in the minds of school children generally, and it has inspired respect for safety regulations by the entire community.

IN THE RETIREMENT of Inspector Arthur E. Miller, the District has lost an able and conscientious police official. An expert on traffic safety, he contributed much to the several traffic safety records won by this city. Civic groups always found him most cooperative. His contributions to civic welfare have been recognized by many gifts and testimonials. It is unfortunate that his health will not permit him to continue the work he is so well fitted to perform.

County Study a Statesmanlike Job

By Benjamin Muse

WITH REGARD to the Fairfax Commission for the Study of County Government, this column very cheerfully takes its place on the bench with those who came to scoff and remained to pray.

MUSE

Its report not only deals with the local situation in a statesmanlike manner, but constitutes a distinct contribution to the literature on county government in Virginia. It should, and doubtless will, be widely read by legislators and by persons contemplating steps toward county government reform.

Among the other valuable material which the commission's activity drew forth, the Fairfax County League of Women Voters had earlier presented the case for the county manager form to the commission in a document which is likewise a fine and scholarly piece of work.

The commission's recommendation as to a ballot to be offered the voters in November, which has been acted upon by the board of supervisors and by the circuit court judge, offers a choice of three alternatives: retention of the present system (to which the commission was unanimously opposed), adoption of the county executive form of government or adoption of the county manager plan. The commission preferred the county executive form.

The strong organization urging the county manager plan, however, now has an ally in the Commission for the Study of County Government on the main issue, which is that of discarding the present system in favor of one of the two forms offered in the Optional Forms Act.

AS TO WHICH of these two forms may be adopted by the voters, this column is unable to feel gravely concerned—in spite of all the public agitation for the county manager form and the able analysis leading to an expression of preferences for the executive form in the commission's report.

In most of the studies of the problems, the county executive and the county manager forms have been regarded more or less as twins. The question of whether supervisors shall be elected by districts or at large is important, but not sufficiently so to warrant rejection of either form were it offered alone. The rest, as the State Chamber of Commerce Report put it, is largely "a matter of emphasis." The Bureau of Public Administration of the University of Virginia found the two forms "very much alike"—with the exception of the manner of election of supervisors and the fact that "the county manager has a little more power and authority in appointing those who work under him than the county executive does."

In practice, this will depend more upon the personality of individuals than upon the technical procedure prescribed by either form. A temperamentally subservient county manager will exercise less actual control over the county administration than a forceful and persuasive county executive.

The point is well illustrated by the position of school superintendents in most Virginia counties. The superintendent of schools is legally responsible to the school board for his every act, but in practice it is well known that more often than not, the superintendent runs the school board.

GETTING BACK from a vacation down Mexico way, the writer took time out to visit a fine Virginia gentleman. George C. Peery, Governor of Virginia from 1934 to 1938, has been in ill health for several years, and he will be 77 in October. He remarked: "Battle is making a fine Governor. John came by to see me when he was campaigning last year. He's a fine fellow." Of Eighth District Congressman Howard W. Smith he said: "He must be a busy man now with all that's going on. They put so much on him in the House."

Governor Peery is frail, but erect, as handsome a figure of a man as when he struggled with a contentious General Assembly and strove to keep Virginia on even keel during the high tide of the New Deal. The aging former Governor sallies from his Tazewell home now only for an occasional drive. He is feeble and speaks slowly, but he likes to have old friends visit him.

Laudable 'Sleeper' in Both Platforms

By James P. Connolly

ONE PLANK common to the platforms of both Governor Lane and George P. Mahoney, leading contenders for the Democratic nomination for governor in the State primary September 18, is that for the creation of what might be called, roughly, a new State Department of Commerce.

CONNOLLY

The issue of taxes and public expenditures has been uppermost in the campaign, yet the proposal for a new State agency or bureau that might relieve them, rather prosaic on its face and somewhat submerged in the platforms, so far has won little or no consideration or discussion.

Still, the possiblity of such a new department well might be one of the more important prospects, in that it could have a considerable effect on the burden borne by the average taxpayer. It could determine whether his load should be lighter or heavier.

If such an agency were established, it might attract to the State more taxable business, and the obligation of the common man might be lessened to that extent. The responsibilty could be transferred from him to the trade. Certain other states already have such agencies to their advantage and profit.

THE PROPOSAL for such a bureau in each of the rival Democratic platforms is pretty far down in the structure and wording is somewhat different, but if the principle were adopted, the result probably would somewhat be the same.

In the Lane platform, the plank is No. 12. It says:

"Inclusion in the department of information of a technically qualified bureau to promote the location of new industries in Maryland to keep employment at high levels."

In the Mahoney platform, the plank is No. 22, and states: "All possible use by the State of Maryland of Maryland commodities and products, such as western Maryland coal, to give employment to Maryland citizens."

As they read, the Lane proposal is the broader of the two. It is further broadened by the integration with the No. 10 Lane plank for:

"Further development of the programs for the preservation and expansion of the State's resources in seafoods, forests, wildlife and minerals and the conservation of water resources for domestic and industrial use."

THERE IS NOTHING strictly new in either proposal. A somewhat similar idea was introduced into the legislature at a recent session by Leroy Preston, a delegate from Baltimore's Fifth District, but was lost in the shuffle.

When the idea first was introduced in Maryland, it was argued not so much as a means to attract new industries as a method to utilize available resources. Probably an inspiration for the plan was the distress in certain areas of western Maryland where coal deposits had been worked to the point where further production was hardly practical without some artificial advantage over other areas.

Preston is now a candidate in the coming primary for State Senator. He was formerly considered a friend of the Administration. In the present campaign he has made a change and is accounted a foe. His idea, if it were his to begin with, has been borrowed by his friends and enemies alike.

In any case, there is nothing strictly new in the idea. Several other States long have had similar bureaus and agencies to their advantages and profit.

Another important Maryland industry, seafood production, also is on the wane, but has not reached the stage of desperation, perhaps, that has been touched in western Maryland. Still the two industries together give some indication of the possible usefulness of the proposed new agency.

CREATION of any new State department is a matter to be approached with caution, because of the expense, but if the prospect is properly surveyed and the outlook is good, there is no reason why the possibility should not be given favorable consideration.

Since the idea was last considered, it has become apparent that Baltimore is capable of far greater expansion as a port and especially as a port for iron ore. "Baltimore," the monthly magazine of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, said in part in its August issue:

"At the present time Baltimore is the leading import center for metallic ores in the country. With the expected depletion of domestic iron ore deposits such as the Mesabi Range, the major steel manufacturers are developing foreign fields of high grade ore in South America, Africa and Labrador. These foreign ores are expected to move into the country in volume in the near future and principal consumers of the ore have indicated a preference for Baltimore as an entry point for this basic material."

Other ports also are in the running for this prospective trade. One large steel company recently chose a location on the Delaware River near Trenton for a new plant. The choice was a disappointment to Baltimore. If creation of a new State Department of Commerce can prevent further disappointments, the department may well pay for itself.

ACROSS THE RIVER AND INTO THE TREES. By Ernest Hemingway. Scribner's. 308 pp. $3.

WHEN YOU ARE GETTING OLD, you still go through the motions: eating, drinking, talking, making love and maybe writing novels.

You have nothing new to say and nothing new to experience. You are still terrified of death, so you still bluster and talk a great deal about your fearlessness, and brag a bit about what a great warrior you are and what a great lover.

You have learned a literary trick in your early youth and you still beat it with a gun butt to show how much you love it. You have discovered that physical love is heightened by a backdrop of death; that ecstacy is greatest in the face of certain and imminent non-being.

So you think it was like this during the retreat from Caporetto, and it was like this again in Spain, and again in Normandy. It worked very well in a novel called "A Farewell to Arms" and again in "For Whom the Bell Tolls," and it worked a little less well in the others, and very badly in a few such as "The Green Hills of Africa" and "To Have and Have Not."

So you say to yourself, I'll be an obscenity if I can't pull the same old trick out of the duffel-bag and beat it once more with a gun butt and pound it into pemmican for the New York pemmican trade. It will taste pretty good with enough scotch whisky and Gordon's gin and many bottles of Roederer (very cold) and Perrier-Jouet. But we must remember to drink not more than three bottles before sun-up because nobody drinks before sun-up anywhere unless he happens to wake up earlier.

AND YOU THINK, who will I be this time, having been all my own heroes in all my own books? And you decide you will be Richard Cantwell, Colonel, Infantry, U. S. A., who is about your own age and has fortunately fought in all the same wars.

And you think who will she be. And having had much experience in such matters, you decide upon a very young and very lovely Italian countess named Renata.

And what will we have the very beat-up colonel of infantry and the very young and lovely Renata do in the last days before the colonel's death? Why what they have both done very well in all the other novels, and no better place to do it than in that city of beauty and death and decay—Venice.

And you think, this time I will be an obscenity if I use the word "obscenity" as a circumlocution. I will use all the good old Anglo-Saxon four-letter words which I helped reintroduce into the written language. And it will make me feel very young and daring again.

BUT WHAT ELSE will an aging colonel of infantry and a young countess do to fill 300 pages? It is a very large problem. And perhaps the best way to fill most of the pages is to have the young countess say: "Tell me about your sad profession," or "Go on, please. You spoke about Lightning Joe before." Whereupon you can then insert 10 more pages of your reminiscences, washed down, however, with much and very good Valpolicella.

And you will be an unmentionable-hyphenated-word-which-you-will-print-in-full if you will not now get off your hairy chest a number of very old grudges which hurt like old wounds in wet weather.

You will take a chance on being sued by an American satirist with a very pitted face, and an unsuccessful haberdasher now high in American politics. And besides this, you will now take care of a couple of safe ones like Georgie Patton and Field Marshal Montgomery. And then you take a rather long breath and begin to feel your gin-scotch-Roederer-cum-Valpolicella and call General Eisenhower an unpleasant thing, which you realize may not be taken kindly by most of your readers.

But there can't be many pages still to write, and you are in need of fresh wampum because you have produced no saleable product in about nine years. So you grit your teeth and you stay at your typewriter like an old campaigner—stay with it through dinner and through the gondola ride with the lovely young countess. And you get through the rest of the night somehow with a couple of fresh bottles of Perrier-Jouet.

AND EVEN when you are alone, you still carry on your monologues about several wars which you are kind enough to admit may bore the countess and perhaps even your readers.

But you know that it will not be long now, and that after tomorrow you can go duck hunting, and after that there will only be a few more pages to write and the colonel will be dead—dying very bravely as the Hemingway hero always dies, but feeling more than a little sorry for himself, and taking almost as long to die as some characters do in Shakespeare or in grand opera.

But you will be a four-letter word if anybody could write a better book than this one, and the magazines and the movies are all very partial to your product.

So you sigh, and kill your hero and package your merchandise for the New York and Hollywood merchants. And being tired, you stir up some very dry martinis.

Conscientious Ernie Read Book 206 Times

By Ben F. Meyer

SAN FRANCISCO DE PAULA, Cuba.—"When I die," says Ernest Hemingway, "it will be from writing checks."

"Not," he added, "that any one will string me up for writing hot ones, but from some sort of ailment growing out of overexercise of the wrist. It seems that I write checks most of the time."

Actually, the novelist must have overemphasized a bit the labor of paying bills, for he has been very busy for almost two years on his new novel, "Across the River and Into the Trees." Its setting is Venice.

And how does he think the new book compares with "For Whom the Bell Tolls," the story of the Spanish war which brought him his greatest fame and wealth?

"I'm crazy about the new book," he said. "I'd go hang myself if I thought it wasn't better. I read the book 206 times, to try and better it or correct errors, and it is as good as I can make it.

"It's different, of course. You can't go writing another book about a bunch of people on a hill in a war. I'd say the new book is about love and death, happiness and sorrow and the town of Venice."

He grinned and added: "I really fired all the barrels on this one."

AND WHAT'S he doing now that the new novel, first since "For Whom the Bell Tolls," is out of the way?

"Oh, I'm on another one already. As a matter of fact, I started it a long time ago, and put it aside for this new one. No. I can't work on two at the same time. The one I'm doing now is a very long book. In fact, it's so long the doctors wonder if it may not be too long for me."

His appearance, however, does not suggest that his 51 years are weighing on him. At first glance, he does seem older, but that's because of his mustache, and a full graying beard.

He leads an active life at times, working on his farm, or finca, as they call it in Cuba. His writing day runs from dawn to just past noon. After lunch there is usually a fishing trip on his yacht, Pilar, and, if luck is good, he spends the afternoon and part of the night fighting marlin. Other days he goes hunting, or to a nearby trap-shoot range, or does odd jobs around his place.

The novelist stands just over 6 feet and, as he says, "I grew out a little on both sides." He is a big, barrel-chested man.

HE SPENT 21 months on "Across the River and Into the Trees."

"I have thin eyelids, and the first light of dawn wakes me up, so I go to work and stay at it until a little after noon. After lunch, I usually go fishing.

He put the scene of his new book in Venice because "I sort of grew up around there as a kid. I couldn't go there while Mussolini was around, but I went back soon after he wasn't. I like the place."

A cat strolled up, stretched, and sat down on Hemingway's left foot. There seemed to be a number of them around.

"There are 52 cats, and 2 dogs," he said. "That's the latest house count." Another cat clambered up the screen door, and a half dozen or more bounded across the terrace.

The gate to Hemingway's house is two blocks off the Central Highway, which runs from one end of Cuba to the other. His place is just at the edge of this village, which is about 10 miles from downtown Havana. He spends little time there, except to go for his yacht, which is anchored in Havana Harbor. He shuns the social life in Cuba's gay capital.

SOME TIME AGO he attended an outdoor luncheon honoring the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. He horrified some of the women by going in shorts, which are his standard dress. But the Duke and Duchess did not seem disturbed and Hemingway sat for an hour or so chatting with the Duchess.

Once in a while he eats lunch at the International Nautical Club, where he keeps his boat. Visitors from all over the world come to the Hemingway house. Friends are always welcome, but not the curious. There is a sign on the gate in Spanish saying that only those with appointments will be received.

Trees and tropical shrubs and flowers almost hide the house from the street. He lives there with his wife, the former Mary Welsh of Bemidgi, Minn. Both enjoy fishing. Mrs. Hemingway recently won first prize in the Havana International Marlin Fishing Tournament with a 100-pounder.

His wife designs furniture, and Hemingway helps his carpenter carry out her ideas. Her bedroom is furnished with beautiful mahogany pieces she designed.

Hunting trophies appear in several rooms of the large, airy house. They include a buffalo head, several antelope with magnificent horns, antlers and other things.

There are many paintings. One is of a newly-killed chicken, painted by a Dutch artist, R. Hynckes. "It is a beautiful picture, and the detail is marvelous," he said. "They sent it to me for my Dutch royalties. I suppose you'd call it 'Hen Upside Down.'"

The painting hangs over a table in his library bearing another trophy—the skull of a lion, with some of the left teeth knocked out by Hemingway's bullet on a hunt in Africa.

BESIDES FISHING, Hemingway enjoys poker, hunting, trap-shooting, popular music. He has his pet hates, too. One of them is canasta. "I never play it. Hell, I'm a card player."

He writes when the notion strikes him. Some of it is done in longhand—"the scenery, and the descriptive stuff. For conversation I use the typewriter, so it doesn't get too far ahead of me."

The novelist appears a bit ill at ease in interviews. He used to be a newspaperman and "I always feel a little embarrassed giving an interview."

He speaks little of his books. He picked up the jacket on his new book, loked at the picture of himself on the back cover. "It's a good picture, even if it makes me look like the devil. It's the only picture, though, that shows very distinctly the three places where my nose was broken."

That seemed to please him.

Notes on the Margin

By Doris W. Thompson

Mrs. Thompson, president of the Washington Booksellers Association and partner in the Francis Scott Key Shop, 28th and O sts. nw., is substituting today for Lee Grove, who is on vacation.

HAVE FUN, Lee, and spare us a thought! A late vacationer has the advantage of cumulative anticipation—and the deep envy of those of us who rushed off earlier and are now back in the old routine.

All phases of the book business are really closely integrated. For instance, take this column with its news of books and the people who write them. The booksellers are a lower echelon of the same chain of command, the main difference being that our words are spoken most of the time and our written word must suffer by comparison with the work of someone particularly skilled and long practiced in setting thoughts and facts on paper.

In the general bookstore, where all types of current reading matter must be kept available, the bookseller worth his salt must develop the taste of a gourmet, with a palate ready and eager to sample all sorts of new flavors. Too many readers deny themselves real pleasure by refusing to vary their reading. To us that seems dull, just meat and potatoes, with no condiments to give added zest to the mainstay of the diet.

A cleaning woman who used to come in once a week expressed this attitude when she flatly refused to sample a specialty of ours left over from a party the night before. "But, Susan," we urged, "you've never tasted anything like this." There was firmness and finality in her reply. "No, ma'am, anything you hear me say I don't like ain't never teched my lips!" Susan has been quoted—mentally—more than once in a bookshop.

WE ARE VERY PROUD of our local authors who provide just such a well-balanced diet. Unfortunately, space prevents our mentioning more than a very few of them and their books.

Helen Husted has done a magnificent job of selecting in her "Love Poems of Six Centuries." Her publishers are to be commended, too, for their part in presenting a volume with eye-appeal, important for a book that makes such an ideal gift.

Harriet Palmer Micocci's "Protocol and the Peabodies" is the sprightly account of an enterprising young couple's joys and tribulations during a year spent dividing their time between jobs in the State Department and even more strenuous labors nights and weekends on their farm in Virginia. If you have ever entertained the idea of buying a farm, you will be interested to learn some of the things you should NOT do. On the other hand, if you are allergic to country air in large doses, this disarmingly frank book will confirm your worst suspicions.

ALL OF YOU who read thrillers hardly need to be told that Burke Wilkinson's "Proceed at Will" was tops in that field. Goeffrey Mildmay makes his second appearance late this month in "Run, Mongoose." His exciting adventures take place in Ireland and Jamaica. Burke Wilkinson, in our estimation, is the John Buchan of this generation of writers, and we sincerely hope that Mildmay will go on and on like our other favorite, Richard Hannay.

With a Very Straight Face

'Inside Stuff' o

BEHIND THE FLYING SAUCERS. By Frank Scully. Holt. 230 pp. $2.75.

INSIDE THE flying saucer which came down in a remote part of New Mexico in the summer of 1949, "we were able to count 16 bodies, that ranged in height from about 36 to 42 inches . . . We took the little bodies out and laid them on the ground. We examined them and their clothing. I remember one of our team saying, 'That looks like the style of 1890.'

"The bodies were perfectly normal in their development. The only trouble was that their skin seemed to be charred a very dark chocolate color. About the only thing that we could decide at the time was that the charring had occurred somewhere in space and that their bodies had been burned as a result of air rushing through that broken porthole window."

No, this is not some admitted fantasy from "Amazing Stories" or the comic magazines. It is being marketed as a completely factual report on an actual 100-foot flying saucer.

The discovery was supposedly hushed up by the Air Force, which threw a heavy guard around the space ship. But a mysterious "Dr. Gee," called in to help with the investigation, told Scully everything and Scully has put it all in his book.

While the scientific holes in Scully's writing are much larger than the broken porthole in the flying saucer, this book is likely to create the sort of panic Orson Welles produced by his irresponsible broadcast on the invasion from Mars.

AS THOUGH THE PUBLIC were not already sufficiently jittery about the very real possibility of falling A and H bombs, Scully adds an even graver threat. He insists with a straight face that the flying saucer invaders have mastered the secret of piloting their craft "along magnetic lines" and can wipe out everyone on this planet in 10 seconds by "demagnetizing" the globe.

This not-very-amusing hoax is loaded with improbabilities.

No one with even a primary knowledge of the various sciences could have read proof on the book.

For instance: The bodies of the little men would have been frozen, not burned, had a porthole broken in a pressurized cabin "somewhere in space." The temperature of interstellar space approximates absolute zero. No air could have rushed into the cabin, at least until it entered our own stratosphere, since no air exists in space.

Scheming Woman M Frontier Really Roug

MEN IN BUCKSKIN. By Herbert Stover. Dodd, Mead. 312 pp. $3.

SIMON BRAIDE, prosperous trader and indomitable frontiersman, makes his bed on the 10th page of Herbert Stover's novel of the Pennsylvania-New York frontier during the Revolution, and for 300 pages thereafter has to lie in it.

Simon's mistake was in allowing himself to be swept off his feet and into marriage with a brunet with soft white shoulders and the musical name of Celine.

Apparently everyone had some ideas about Celine except Simon, who had been down river for a spell, for when the marriage became known there were any number of politely lifted eyebrows.

The lady who said she was no tavern wench, Simon soon discovered, had two loves: Money and brandy. When Simon announced that he was taking her to the Loyalsock to make their home, she had a 90-proof tantrum.

Buckskin Simon, the honest guy, was already beginning to be sorry.

ONCE ESTABLISHED in their little home on the river, Simon began working on his map of the frontier for General Washington, and suffering through the dubious companionship of his lady.

Nearby lived John Wigton, Simon's friend and former associate in the trading business, and John's blond daughter, Hope. Simon had always liked Hope, but had thought of her as a young girl rather than as a possible wife.

When Simon came home one day and found his dog dead at the door, the living room a shambles, Celine and map gone and a outside the wind had problems.

District Affairs

Far Too Much Work for One General

By Harry N. Stull

ATTENTION HAS BEEN CALLED to the Federation of Citizens Associations' resolution to seek legislation providing for the appointment of a member of the Public Utilities Commission to relieve the Engineer Commissioner from service on that body. This, of course, is no reflection on the efficient officer who now occupies that position, but experience has proved that it is impossible for one man to perform all the duties now required of the Engineer Commissioner.

STULL

Frequently he has conflicting hearings. The assignment of an assistant to serve for him at some of these hearings is not satisfactory to those who appear before these bodies.

When Gen. Gordon Young disqualified himself in a recent Public Utilities hearing because the District Government was seriously involved in the controversy, it was the attempt of an honest man to meet the proprieties of the occasion. It should not have been necessary.

The present Engineer Commissioner, because of the illness or inactivity of civilian members of the board, has had to act as board spokesman, appear frequently before committees of Congress, sit as a member of numerous commissions and boards and still attend to the many engineering problems confronting the District. How much work can we expect one man to do?

THE PASSAGE of time and the complicated international situation accentuates the need for the establishment of a competent civilian defense organization here. The failure of the House to meet the situation makes necessary a determined effort by all civic groups to convince the Senate of the total inadequacy of the $30,000 reluctantly appropriated by the lower House.

Much publicity is being given to the proposed dispersal of certain Government units on the assumption that Washington would be one of the first targets of the enemy. There would still remain many Government agencies and hundreds of thousands of people who would need protection. It is hoped that the House does not regard those of us who remain here as expendable.

It takes time to build up and train a defense organization. Other communities, where money can be spent with the people's consent, have made progress. The District Medical Society (upon whose members a great deal of this work would fall) has petitioned the Senate to appropriate sufficient funds for the purpose. It would be helpful if other organizations took similar action.

IT IS NOTEWORTHY that the citizens of Fairfax County, Va., are to be permitted to decide by referendum what kind of county government they desire. This is the essence of democracy. It is unfortunate that in the Capital of the United States, no similar right is granted to the 800,000 people who reside there.

In the absence of these democratic rights, our people are, in effect, wards of the Federal Government. We must wait until the machinery of the mighty Congress of the United States gets into operation to decide some trivial matter which, in other American cities, would be no more than municipal regulations. In the absence of referendum here, the residents of the District are prevented from deciding that the kind of government we have is not the kind we want.

THE OPENING of school will see the School Safety Patrol again in action. This organization, sponsored by the American Automobile Association with the cooperation of police, has been in existence 30 years. It now numbers more than half a million children throughout the country. Service in this organization has taught its members responsibility, which will lead to future community leadership. It has instilled safety in the minds of school children generally, and it has inspired respect for safety regulations by the entire community.

IN THE RETIREMENT of Inspector Arthur E. Miller, the District has lost an able and conscientious police official. An expert on traffic safety, he contributed much to the several traffic safety records won by this city. Civic groups always found him most cooperative. His contributions to civic welfare have been recognized by many gifts and testimonials. It is unfortunate that his health will not permit him to continue the work he is so well fitted to perform.

County Study a Statesmanlike Job

By Benjamin Muse

WITH REGARD to the Fairfax Commission for the Study of County Government, this column very cheerfully takes its place on the bench with those who came to scoff and remained to pray.

MUSE

Its report not only deals with the local situation in a statesmanlike manner, but constitutes a distinct contribution to the literature on county government in Virginia. It should, and doubtless will, be widely read by legislators and by persons contemplating steps toward county government reform.

Among the other valuable material which the commission's activity drew forth, the Fairfax County League of Women Voters had earlier presented the case for the county manager form to the commission in a document which is likewise a fine and scholarly piece of work.

The commission s recommendation as to a ballot to be offered the voters in November, which has been acted upon by the board of supervisors and by the circuit court judge, offers a choice of three alternatives: retention of the present system (to which the commission was unanimously opposed), adoption of the county executive form of government or adoption of the county manager plan. The commission preferred the county executive form.

The strong organization urging the county manager plan, however, now has an ally in the Commission for the Study of County Government on the main issue, which is that of discarding the present system in favor of one of the two forms offered in the Optional Forms Act.

AS TO WHICH of these two forms may be adopted by the voters, this column is unable to feel gravely concerned—in spite of all the public agitation for the county manager form and the able analysis leading to an expression of preferences for the executive form in the commission's report.

In most of the studies of the problems, the county executive and the county manager forms have been regarded more or less as twins. The question of whether supervisors shall be elected by districts or at large is important, but not sufficiently so to warrant rejection of either form were it offered alone. The rest, as the State Chamber of Commerce Report put it, is largely "a matter of emphasis." The Bureau of Public Administration of the University of Virginia found the two forms "very much alike"—with the exception of the manner of election of supervisors and the fact that "the county manager has a little more power and authority in appointing those who work under him than the county executive does."

In practice, this will depend more upon the personality of individuals than upon the technical procedure prescribed by either form. A temperamentally subservient county manager will exercise less actual control over the county administration than a forceful and persuasive county executive.

The point is well illustrated by the position of school superintendents in most Virginia counties. The superintendent of schools is legally responsible to the school board for his every act, but in practice it is well known that more often than not, the superintendent runs the school board.

GETTING BACK from a vacation down Mexico way, the writer took time out to visit a fine Virginia gentleman. George C. Peery, Governor of Virginia from 1934 to 1938, has been in ill health for several years, and he will be 77 in October. He remarked: "Battle is making a fine Governor. John came by to see me when he was campaigning last year. He's a fine fellow." Of Eighth District Congressman Howard W. Smith he said: "He must be a busy man now with all that's going on. They put so much on him in the House."

Governor Peery is frail, but erect, as handsome a figure of a man as when he struggled with a contentious General Assembly and strove to keep Virginia on even keel during the high tide of the New Deal. The aging former Governor sallies from his Tazewell home now only for an occasional drive. He is feeble and speaks slowly, but he likes to have old friends visit him.

Laudable 'Sleeper' in Both Platforms

By James P. Connolly

ONE PLANK common to the platforms of both Governor Lane and George P. Mahoney, leading contenders for the Democratic nomination for governor in the State primary September 18, is that for the creation of what might be called, roughly, a new State Department of Commerce.

CONNOLLY

The issue of taxes and public expenditures has been uppermost in the campaign, yet the proposal for a new State agency or bureau that might relieve them, rather prosaic on its face and somewhat submerged in the platforms, so far has won little or no consideration or discussion.

Still, the possiblity of such a new department well might be one of the more important prospects, in that it could have a considerable effect on the burden borne by the average taxpayer. It could determine whether his load should be lighter or heavier.

If such an agency were established, it might attract to the State more taxable business, and the obligation of the common man might be lessened to that extent. The responsibilty could be transferred from him to the trade. Certain other states already have such agencies to their advantage and profit.

THE PROPOSAL for such a bureau in each of the rival Democratic platforms is pretty far down in the structure and wording is somewhat different, but if the principle were adopted, the result probably would somewhat be the same.

In the Lane platform, the plank is No. 12. It says:

"Inclusion in the department of information of a technically qualified bureau to promote the location of new industries in Maryland to keep employment at high levels."

In the Mahoney platform, the plank is No. 22, and states: "All possible use by the State of Maryland of Maryland commodities and products, such as western Maryland coal, to give employment to Maryland citizens."

As they read, the Lane proposal is the broader of the two. It is further broadened by the integration with the No. 10 Lane plank for:

"Further development of the programs for the preservation and expansion of the State's resources in seafoods, forests, wildlife and minerals and the conservation of water resources for domestic and industrial use."

THERE IS NOTHING strictly new in either proposal. A somewhat similar idea was introduced into the legislature at a recent session by Leroy Preston, a delegate from Baltimore's Fifth District, but was lost in the shuffle.

When the idea first was introduced in Maryland, it was argued not so much as a means to attract new industries as a method to utilize available resources. Probably an inspiration for the plan was the distress in certain areas of western Maryland where coal deposits had been worked to the point where further production was hardly practical without some artificial advantage over other areas.

Preston is now a candidate in the coming primary for State Senator. He was formerly considered a friend of the Administration. In the present campaign he has made a change and is accounted a foe. His idea, if it were his to begin with, has been borrowed by his friends and enemies alike.

In any case, there is nothing strictly new in the idea. Several other States long have had similar bureaus and agencies to their advantages and profit.

Another important Maryland industry, seafood production, also is on the wane, but has not reached the stage of desperation, perhaps, that has been touched in western Maryland. Still the two industries together give some indication of the possible usefulness of the proposed new agency.

CREATION of any new State department is a matter to be approached with caution, because of the expense, but if the prospect is properly surveyed and the outlook is good, there is no reason why the possibility should not be given favorable consideration.

Since the idea was last considered, it has become apparent that Baltimore is capable of far greater expansion as a port and especially as a port for iron ore. "Baltimore," the monthly magazine of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, said in part in its August issue:

"At the present time Baltimore is the leading import center for metallic ores in the country. With the expected depletion of domestic iron ore deposits such as the Mesabi Range, the major steel manufacturers are developing foreign fields of high grade ore in South America, Africa and Labrador. These foreign ores are expected to move into the country in volume in the near future and principal consumers of the ore have indicated a preference for Baltimore as an entry point for this basic material."

Other ports also are in the running for this prospective trade. One large steel company recently chose a location on the Delaware River near Trenton for a new plant. The choice was a disappointment to Baltimore. If creation of a new State Department of Commerce can prevent further disappointments, the department may well pay for itself.

Duck Hunting Tomorrow

Hemingway Plays an Old Record

By Sterling North

ACROSS THE RIVER AND INTO THE TREES. By Ernest Hemingway. Scribner's. 308 pp. $3.

WHEN YOU ARE GETTING OLD, you still go through the motions: eating, drinking, talking, making love and maybe writing novels.

You have nothing new to say and nothing new to experience. You are still terrified of death, so you still bluster and talk a great deal about your fearlessness, and brag a bit about what a great warrior you are and what a great lover.

You have learned a literary trick in your early youth and you still beat it with a gun butt to show how much you love it. You have discovered that physical love is heightened by a backdrop of death; that ecstacy is greatest in the face of certain and imminent non-being.

So you think it was like this during the retreat from Caporetto, and it was like this again in Spain, and again in Normandy. It worked very well in a novel called "A Farewell to Arms" and again in "For Whom the Bell Tolls," and it worked a little less well in the others, and very badly in a few such as "The Green Hills of Africa" and "To Have and Have Not."

So you say to yourself, I'll be an obscenity if I can't pull the same old trick out of the duffel-bag and beat it once more with a gun butt and pound it into pemmican for the New York pemmican trade. It will taste pretty good with enough scotch whisky and Gordon's gin and many bottles of Roederer (very cold) and Perrier-Jouet. But we must remember to drink not more than three bottles before sun-up because nobody drinks before sun-up anywhere unless he happens to wake up earlier.

AND YOU THINK, who will I be this time, having been all my own heroes in all my own books? And you decide you will be Richard Cantwell, Colonel, Infantry, U. S. A., who is about your own age and has fortunately fought in all the same wars.

And you think who will she be. And having had much experience in such matters, you decide upon a very young and very lovely Italian countess named Renata.

And what will we have the very beat-up colonel of infantry and the very young and lovely Renata do in the last days before the colonel's death? Why what they have both done very well in all the other novels, and no better place to do it than in that city of beauty and death and decay—Venice.

And you think, this time I will be an obscenity if I use the word "obscenity" as a circumlocution. I will use all the good old Anglo-Saxon four-letter words which I helped reintroduce into the written language. And it will make me feel very young and daring again.

BUT WHAT ELSE will an aging colonel of infantry and a young countess do to fill 300 pages? It is a very large problem. And perhaps the best way to fill most of the pages is to have the young countess say: "Tell me about your sad profession," or "Go on, please. You spoke about Lightning Joe before." Whereupon you can then insert 10 more pages of your reminiscences, washed down, however, with much and very good Valpolicella.

And you will be an unmentionable-hyphenated-word-which-you-will-print-in-full if you will not now get off your hairy chest a number of very old grudges which hurt like old wounds in wet weather.

You will take a chance on being sued by an American satirist with a very pitted face, and an unsuccessful haberdasher now high in American politics. And besides this, you will now take care of a couple of safe ones like Georgie Patton and Field Marshal Montgomery. And then you take a rather long breath and begin to feel your gin-scotch-Roederer-cum-Valpolicella and call General Eisenhower an unpleasant thing, which you realize may not be taken kindly by most of your readers.

But there can't be many pages still to write, and you are in need of fresh wampum because you have produced no saleable product in about nine years. So you grit your teeth and you stay at your typewriter like an old campaigner—stay with it through dinner and through the gondola ride with the lovely young countess. And you get through the rest of the night somehow with a couple of fresh bottles of Perrier-Jouet.

AND EVEN when you are alone, you still carry on your monologues about several wars which you are kind enough to admit may bore the countess and perhaps even your readers.

But you know that it will not be long now, and that after tomorrow you can go duck hunting, and after that there will only be a few more pages to write and the colonel will be dead—dying very bravely as the Hemingway hero always dies, but feeling more than a little sorry for himself, and taking almost as long to die as some characters do in Shakespeare or in grand opera.

But you will be a four-letter word if anybody could write a better book than this one, and the magazines and the movies are all very partial to your product.

So you sigh, and kill your hero and package your merchandise for the New York and Hollywood merchants. And being tired, you stir up some very dry martinis.

Conscientious Ernie Read Book 206 Times

By Ben F. Meyer

SAN FRANCISCO DE PAULA, Cuba.—"When I die," says Ernest Hemingway, "it will be from writing checks."

"Not," he added, "that any one will string me up for writing hot ones, but from some sort of ailment growing out of overexercise of the wrist. It seems that I write checks most of the time."

Actually, the novelist must have overemphasized a bit the labor of paying bills, for he has been very busy for almost two years on his new novel, "Across the River and Into the Trees." Its setting is Venice.

And how does he think the new book compares with "For Whom the Bell Tolls," the story of the Spanish war which brought him his greatest fame and wealth?

"I'm crazy about the new book," he said. "I'd go hang myself if I thought it wasn't better. I read the book 206 times, to try and better it or correct errors, and it is as good as I can make it.

"It's different, of course. You can't go writing another book about a bunch of people on a hill in a war. I'd say the new book is about love and death, happiness and sorrow and the town of Venice."

He grinned and added: "I really fired all the barrels on this one."

AND WHAT'S he doing now that the new novel, first since "For Whom the Bell Tolls," is out of the way?

"Oh, I'm on another one already. As a matter of fact, I started it a long time ago, and put it aside for this new one. No, I can't work on two at the same time. The one I'm doing now is a very long book. In fact, it's so long the doctors wonder if it may not be too long for me."

His appearance, however, does not suggest that his 51 years are weighing on him. At first glance, he does seem older, but that's because of his mustache, and a full graying beard.

He leads an active life at times, working on his farm, or finca, as they call it in Cuba. His writing day runs from dawn to just past noon. After lunch there is usually a fishing trip on his yacht, Pilar, and, if luck is good, he spends the afternoon and part of the night fighting marlin. Other days he goes hunting, or to a nearby trap-shoot range, or does odd jobs around his place.

The novelist stands just over 6 feet and, as he says, "I grew out a little on both sides." He is a big, barrel-chested man.

HE SPENT 21 months on "Across the River and Into the Trees."

"I have thin eyelids, and the first light of dawn wakes me up, so I go to work and stay at it until a little after noon. After lunch, I usually go fishing.

He put the scene of his new book in Venice because "I sort of grew up around there as a kid. I couldn't go there while Mussolini was around, but I went back soon after he wasn't. I like the place."

A cat strolled up, stretched, and sat down on Hemingway's left foot. There seemed to be a number of them around.

"There are 52 cats, and 2 dogs," he said. "That's the latest house count." Another cat clambered up the screen door, and a half dozen or more bounded across the terrace.

The gate to Hemingway's house is two blocks off the Central Highway, which runs from one end of Cuba to the other. His place is just at the edge of this village, which is about 10 miles from downtown Havana. He spends little time there, except to go for his yacht, which is anchored in Havana Harbor. He shuns the social life in Cuba's gay capital.

SOME TIME AGO he attended an outdoor luncheon honoring the Duke and Duchess of Windsor. He horrified some of the women by going in shorts, which are his standard dress. But the Duke and Duchess did not seem disturbed and Hemingway sat for an hour or so chatting with the Duchess.

Once in a while he eats lunch at the International Nautical Club, where he keeps his boat. Visitors from all over the world come to the Hemingway house. Friends are always welcome, but not the curious. There is a sign on the gate in Spanish saying that only those with appointments will be received.

Trees and tropical shrubs and flowers almost hide the house from the street. He lives there with his wife, the former Mary Welsh of Bemidgi, Minn. Both enjoy fishing. Mrs. Hemingway recently won first prize in the Havana International Marlin Fishing Tournament with a 100-pounder.

His wife designs furniture, and Hemingway helps his carpenter carry out her ideas. Her bedroom is furnished with beautiful mahogany pieces she designed.

Hunting trophies appear in several rooms of the large, airy house. They include a buffalo head, several antelope with magnificent horns, antlers and other things.

There are many paintings. One is of a newly-killed chicken, painted by a Dutch artist, R. Hynckes. "It is a beautiful picture, and the detail is marvelous," he said. "They sent it to me for my Dutch royalties. I suppose you'd call it 'Hen Upside Down.'"

The painting hangs over a table in his library bearing another trophy—the skull of a lion, with some of the left teeth knocked out by Hemingway's bullet on a hunt in Africa.

BESIDES FISHING, Hemingway enjoys poker, hunting, trap-shooting, popular music. He has his pet hates, too. One of them is canasta. "I never play it. Hell, I'm a card player."

He writes when the notion strikes him. Some of it is done in longhand—"the scenery, and the descriptive stuff. For conversation I use the typewriter, so it doesn't get too far ahead of me."

The novelist appears a bit ill at ease in interviews. He used to be a newspaperman and "I always feel a little embarrassed giving an interview."

He speaks little of his books. He picked up the jacket on his new book, loked at the picture of himself on the back cover. "It's a good picture, even if it makes me look like the devil. It's the only picture, though, that shows very distinctly the three places where my nose was broken."

That seemed to please him.

Notes on the Margin

By Doris W. Thompson

Mrs. Thompson, president of the Washington Booksellers Association and partner in the Francis Scott Key Shop, 28th and O sts. nw., is substituting today for Lee Grove, who is on vacation.

HAVE FUN, Lee, and spare us a thought! A late vacationer has the advantage of cumulative anticipation—and the deep envy of those of us who rushed off earlier and are now back in the old routine.

All phases of the book business are really closely integrated. For instance, take this column with its news of books and the people who write them. The booksellers are a lower echelon of the same chain of command, the main difference being that our words are spoken most of the time and our written word must suffer by comparison with the work of someone particularly skilled and long practiced in setting thoughts and facts on paper.

In the general bookstore, where all types of current reading matter must be kept available, the bookseller worth his salt must develop the taste of a gourmet, with a palate ready and eager to sample all sorts of new flavors. Too many readers deny themselves real pleasure by refusing to vary their reading. To us that seems dull, just meat and potatoes, with no condiments to give added zest to the mainstay of the diet.

A cleaning woman who used to come in once a week expressed this attitude when she flatly refused to sample a specialty of ours left over from a party the night before. "But, Susan," we urged, "you've never tasted anything like this." There was firmness and finality in her reply. "No, ma'am, anything you hear me say I don't like ain't never teched my lips!" Susan has been quoted—mentally—more than once in a bookshop.

WE ARE VERY PROUD of our local authors who provide just such a well-balanced diet. Unfortunately, space prevents our mentioning more than a very few of them and their books.

Helen Husted has done a magnificent job of selecting in her "Love Poems of Six Centuries." Her publishers are to be commended, too, for their part in presenting a volume with eye-appeal, important for a book that makes such an ideal gift.

Harriet Palmer Micocci's "Protocol and the Peabodies" is the sprightly account of an enterprising young couple's joys and tribulations during a year spent dividing their time between jobs in the State Department and even more strenuous labors nights and weekends on their farm in Virginia. If you have ever entertained the idea of buying a farm, you will be interested to learn some of the things you should NOT do. On the other hand, if you are allergic to country air in large doses, this disarmingly frank book will confirm your worst suspicions.

ALL OF YOU who read thrillers hardly need to be told that Burke Wilkinson's "Proceed at Will" was tops in that field. Goeffrey Mildmay makes his second appearance late this month in "Run, Mongoose." His exciting adventures take place in Ireland and Jamaica. Burke Wilkinson, in our estimation, is the John Buchan of this generation of writers, and we sincerely hope that Mildmay will go on and on like our other favorite, Richard Hannay.

With a Very Straight Face

'Inside Stuff' on Flying Discs

BEHIND THE FLYING SAUCERS. By Frank Scully. Holt. 230 pp. $2.75.

INSIDE THE flying saucer which came down in a remote part of New Mexico in the summer of 1949, "we were able to count 16 bodies, that ranged in height from about 36 to 42 inches . . . We took the little bodies out and laid them on the ground. We examined them and their clothing. I remember one of our team saying, 'That looks like the style of 1890.'

"The bodies were perfectly normal in their development. The only trouble was that their skin seemed to be charred a very dark chocolate color. About the only thing that we could decide at the time was that the charring had occurred somewhere in space and that their bodies had been burned as a result of air rushing through that broken porthole window."

No, this is not some admitted fantasy from "Amazing Stories" or the comic magazines. It is being marketed as a completely factual report on an actual 100-foot flying saucer.

The discovery was supposedly hushed up by the Air Force, which threw a heavy guard around the space ship. But a mysterious "Dr. Gee," called in to help with the investigation, told Scully everything and Scully has put it all in his book.

While the scientific holes in Scully's writing are much larger than the broken porthole in the flying saucer, this book is likely to create the sort of panic Orson Welles produced by his irresponsible broadcast on the invasion from Mars.

AS THOUGH THE PUBLIC were not already sufficiently jittery about the very real possibility of falling A and H bombs, Scully adds an even graver threat. He insists with a straight face that the flying saucer invaders have mastered the secret of piloting their craft "along magnetic lines" and can wipe out everyone on this planet in 10 seconds by "demagnetizing" the globe.

This not-very-amusing hoax is loaded with improbabilities.

No one with even a primary knowledge of the various sciences could have read proof on the book.

For instance: The bodies of the little men would have been frozen, not burned, had a porthole broken in a pressurized cabin "somewhere in space." The temperature of interstellar space approximates absolute zero. No air could have rushed into the cabin, at least until it entered our own stratosphere, since no air exists in space.

What happened to the little bodies? Scully insists one was on display at the Rosenwald Museum in Chicago. A quick check with that institution brought a sharp, indignant denial.

DR. GEE and the Air Force officers got into the ship by a secret door, in one version in this book. In another chapter they used $35,000 worth of diamond drills trying to pierce the incredibly hard metal—a metal they could not identify. They must have been rather stupid scientists, since, through the use of the spectroheliograph, we know the elements present even in the visible portions of the sun and any metallurgist could have analyzed the nature of the alloy.

The little radio taken from the ship (which is described so vaguely that radio technicians will howl with laughter) presumably brought in a squealing signal 15 minutes after every hour. How did it happen that signals from another planet were geared to earthly time?

Scully should get together with himself. The clothing of the little men (which for some reason wasn't burned when the bodies were charred) is described in one place as a sort of military uniform, in another as the regalia of the 1890s.

All of these clumsy errors on about five pages. It would take 50,000 words to analyze the incredible pseudo-scientific boners in the rest of the book.

And yet the gullible public, which currently is eating up "Worlds in Collision" and "Dianetics," will undoubtedly push this farcical hoax far up the "nonfiction" best-seller list.

SCULLY gives himself away completely in a page or two devoted to previous hoaxes and how no serious writer would want to be connected with such science fakery. But he concludes that the public not only forgives, but often rewards the fakers—a bit of wishful thinking by an author who must realize by now that his position is an unenviable one.

As an erstwhile student of Forest Ray Moulton, this reviewer takes his old teacher's recent statement on "saucers" completely seriously. And Scully's attempt to shrug off Moulton's disparaging remarks carries about as much weight as would a Milton Berle attack on the theories of Dr. Einstein.

It would seem that Variety's gagster-columnist, Scully, has laid a very large and explosive egg.

Linguistic Metamorphosis

A Saucy European Guide to U. S.

By John Barkham

THE UNITED STATES. Edited by Dore Ogrizek. McGraw-Hill. 518 pp. $6.50.

THIS SAUCY and attractive book presents a good deal more than it promises.

Ostensibly, it is another guide to the United States, of which there is a shelfful available already. What sets it apart from the others, however, is its European origin. This is America as a European sees it—and the outcome is a product of unusual flavor, like a familiar dish served with a zestful sauce.

The peculiar genesis of the book is probably responsible. This is one of a series of world guides produced in Europe under the editorship of Dore Ogrizek. The writing for this volume was entrusted to good American names like Loyal Compton, Don Kellogg and David Preston, but (and here's the gimmick) their work was "translated" by Janine Ribes. So apparently this is a retranslation back to the original English.

The end product of this linguistic metamorphosis is surprisingly readable. Only once in a while will you run into a give-away sentence like: "The theater in America is almost a New York exclusivity." The color and line illustrations are by French artists like Beauville, Pierre Noel and Le Romain, and add a rare piquancy to the dish as a whole.

Information-wise (and this, after all, is the raison d'etre of the book), the guide appears to be accurate and quite up-to-date. But this is something that can be found in standard guidebooks. What Ogrizek offers as an "exclusivity" is the Continental touch, and this filters through charmingly, and in the most unexpected places.

Reading this book is like being taken through your own home by a highly intelligent Frenchman, who sees and describes in his own revealing way the things you never notice any more.

Only Yesterday

GET A HORSE! By M. M. Musselman. Lippincott. 304 pp. $3.95.
THE STORY OF THE STANLEY STEAMER. By George Woodbury. Norton. 256 pp. $3.

"THIS BOOK is for those unfortunate people who have been born into an era which takes the motor car for granted," begins Mr. Musselman, presumably tugging at his long gray beard. But come to think of it, there must be several million Americans around who can remember the time when automobiles were freaks and far between. Although Mr. Musselman does not consciously address them, his book, and that of Mr. Woodbury, are for these veterans.

They will remember the good old days recaptured in both these dithyrambic volumes. For the old and not-so-oldtimers, names like the Stutz Bearcat, the Thomas Flyer, the Hudson Super Six will recall memories outside the experience of the kids who go scooting around in "hot rods" nowadays.

Both of these writers realize how effectively the internal combustion engine has changed our whole civilization. If the automobile had not arrived to make us a Nation on wheels, what might have been the pattern of living today? Mr. Musselman tells the whole story from those misty beginnings in the 1870s, when a man named George Baldwin Selden (an unknown, to whom Detroit should have raised a monument a hundred feet high) patented the "gasoline road locomotive," down to the dreamboats and hard-top convertibles that roll from the assembly lines today.

Not many people know it, but there was a time when the steam engine almost nosed out the gasoline engine for automotible supremacy, and the car that did it was the Stanley Steamer. As far back as 1907, it reached a speed of 190 mph. Mr. Woodbury's Stanley is not that kind of car but the family-type 1917 model, the last ever made. It was a doughty car that deserved a better fate than the oblivion in which it now rests, but this nostalgic book, so richly written, will do much to correct that misfortune.

The automobile is young as time goes, but old as our lives are lived. Here, in these books, is a peep into our recent past, an authentically American past.

Girl Gangs

TOMBOY. By Hall Ellson. Scribners. 215 pp. $2.75.

THIS is an alarming book. Read in conjunction with Albert Deutsch's "Rejected Children," it makes one despair of ever solving the problem of our juvenile delinquents.

In "Tomboy," we get a close look at the female of the species, the jeans-clad, tough-talking bobbysoxers called Harps, who prey in packs, breaking into stores, mugging helpless drunks and generally acting like the hardened criminals they pretend to be. It's hard to tell why they're that way: it could be home environment, the stimulus of comics and cheap movies, or a hundred other things. These gangs roam our streets, and before they are out of their teens they wind up inside the institutions Mr. Deutsch talks about, where many of them do, in fact, become criminals.

Mr. Ellson has based his novel of these big city Harps on actual interviews. Everything in the story really happened. No resemblance to living persons or actual events is coincidental. That is what makes it so alarming.

The well-known psychiatrist, Dr. Frederic Wertham, points the necessary moral in his introduction to the book: Where, he asks, are the do-gooders who are shocked every time such conditions are described, yet never get shocked enough to take real action?

Well-Knit Adventure Yarn

Scheming Woman Makes Frontier Really Rough

MEN IN BUCKSKIN. By Herbert Stover. Dodd, Mead. 312 pp. $3.

SIMON BRAIDE, prosperous trader and indomitable frontiersman, makes his bed on the 10th page of Herbert Stover's novel of the Pennsylvania-New York frontier during the Revolution, and for 300 pages thereafter has to lie in it.

Simon's mistake was in allowing himself to be swept off his feet and into marriage with a brunet with soft white shoulders and the musical name of Celine.

Apparently everyone had some ideas about Celine except Simon, who had been down river for a spell, for when the marriage became known there were any number of politely lifted eyebrows.

The lady who said she was no tavern wench, Simon soon discovered, had two loves: Money and brandy. When Simon announced that he was taking her to the Loyalsock to make their home, she had a 90-proof tantrum.

Buckskin Simon, the honest guy, was already beginning to be sorry.

ONCE ESTABLISHED in their little home on the river, Simon began working on his map of the frontier for General Washington, and suffering through the dubious companionship of his lady.

Nearby lived John Wigton, Simon's friend and former associate in the trading business, and John's blond daughter, Hope. Simon had always liked Hope, but had thought of her as a young girl rather than as a possible wife.

When Simon came home one day and found his dog dead at the door, the living room a shambles, Celine and the precious map gone and a man's shoeprint outside the window, he really had problems.

Was his wife being dragged north to the British post, Fort Niagara, by Indians? Was the map burned, or would it reach Britons who would appreciate its military significance and thereby learn what the Continental Army was thinking about?

The circumstances of the raid on Simon's house were peculiar, too. No one had seen Indians operating in the vicinity, but the dog had been killed by an arrow. Hope, in the postmortem of the situation that followed, pointed out that the arrow had a stone tip made by Delawares, and this was not Delaware country, and, besides that, the arrow was very old.

It is a long time before Simon gets himself out of his picklements, and learns the answer to Celine. That lady had come from the British lines, had returned to her husband in England. Simon, it seems, she had married bigamously for the sake of his money.

Stover, author of "Song of the Susquehanna," in "Men in Buckskin" provides a well knit adventure yarn, and keeps the reader running just ahead of the Indians and Tories. When the reader is finished he may be a little winded, but he will have been entertained.—LEE GROVE

In a Nutshell

THE MAGIC FALLACY. By David Westheimer. MacMillan. $2.

WITH perspective understanding, David Westheimer shows how youth's unfaltering illusion that all's right with the world is the "Magic Fallacy." Young Pershing, emotionally trapped by his sensual young stepmother, makes a half confession to his younger friend, Joe. Joe's unsullied magic fallacy prevents him from realizing the situation, and he unwittingly withholds the help he could have given. Through to the tragic climax, Mr. Westheimer flawlessly supports his major premise. His prose is original, picturesque and beautiful. Here is a novella that, though read in a short time, is long in one's thoughts.

MY LORD AMERICA. By Alec Rackowe. Farrar, Straus. 437 pp. $3.

CHARLES MARSDEN'S guardian dies, leaving his ward uncertain of his parentage but strongly of the opinion that he is a gentleman, and anxious to go to England. Things turn out better than the lad ever dreamed, and he goes to the London of Charles II as an earl. In the end, however, Charles Marsden knows he is an American and returns to Virginia plantation life, in this fair to middling cloak and sword novel.

THAT USELESS HOUND. By Leon F. Whitney. Dodd, Mead. 211 pp. Ill. $2.50.

STORY of a Southern prison camp superintendent's son, two trusties and a bloodhound misnamed "Useless," and adventures that include kidnaping. The author, Leon F. Whitney, is a veterinarian and breeder of bloodhounds. He tells a good story that should appeal to dog lovers 14 years of age and upward.

The Coffin Corner . . .

MURDER COMES HIGH, by Hugh Lawrence Nelson. (Rinehart, $2.50). Rumored uranium deposit in Colorado mountains leads to "salting" mine and subsequent murder. Zebulon Buck and Jim Dunn outsmart local sheriff and nail slayer. Effective background, considerable homespun humor and fairly airtight plot. Agreeable.

DEATH WEARS CAT'S EYES, by D. B. Olsen. (Crime Club, $2.50). California widower whose wife died in suspicious "accident" goes to jail for slaying gal who resembled dead spouse. Miss Rachel Murdock, who thinks police theory of crime is silly, endangers life to clear suspect. Enjoyable—if you like spinster sleuths.

METHOD IN HIS MURDER, by Thurman Warriner. (Macmillan, $2.50). Two murders in English countryside involve harassed young lawyer-novelist, his diabolical wife, his godfather (who turns amateur sleuth) and a robust archdeacon. Amusing, scary, leisurely, well plotted—British mystery writing at its best.

The Fall Book Deluge Is On: Minimum of 50 Out This Week

By W. G. Rogers

NEW YORK.—If you want a book, you're just in time, for this week comes the deluge.

About 50 new books already have been dumped on store shelves and tables by about 25 publishers for release on one of the six days from Monday through Saturday. This reviewer has seen 50 as of this writing, and as of your reading there'll certainly be more.

Maybe the price is down a little, too, despite the rise in other markets. A lot of novels now selling at $2.75 would have cost $3 last year.

A tally of reviews sent out from this office in the five weeks starting August 1 shows the average price of the 47 books covered was $3.19; for the same 1949 period, the average price of 49 books was $3.32.

Here's a classification of the 50 books to appear this week:

One play, by Christopher Fry; one poetry, by Wallace Stevens; one about music; one about hunting bears; one about railroads; one about trees; one about Indians; four biographies; three about art, three inspirational or religious works; three about letters and grammar; five about history, politics and society; one child's book, one detective story anthology; two science fiction works, and 20 novels.

One novel is by a South African, one by an Italian, one by a Russian, eight by English writers and nine by Americans. The novelists you'll know best are Erskine Caldwell, Jon Godden, Robert Lewis Taylor, Monica Dickens and Paul Gallico, but a couple of names you will surely remember next time are J. Trevor Story and Doris Lessing, each with a first novel.

John T. McCutcheon's autobiography, "Drawn from Memory," will attract the innumerable admirers of his cartoons. There is also the promise of interesting and important reading in Merrill Jensen's "The New Nation: A History of the United States During the Confederation"; Anzia Yezierska's autobiographical "Red Ribbon on a White Horse"; and Barrington Moore, jr.'s, "Soviet Politics—The Dilemma of Power."

In case you still don't find what you want in this batch, you have to wait only until next week, when the books already received, again as of this writing, number more than 25.

Tells How to Secure Mastery of English Quickly

An interesting new booklet offered free to men and women who want to secure a real mastery of the English language tells of a "foolproof" method for studying English usage without attending classes. The plan, as described in this little book, has been worked out by Grenville Kleiser, who has helped thousands of students to a better command of English.

According to the publishers, this old authority uses no involved rules of grammar or rhetoric, but presents a simple, straightforward, inspiring method that secures real results in a very short time. Thousands of users of this method, they say, have gained increased power to express themselves in fluent, convincing, clear-cut English and so have improved their possibilities of social and business advantages.

To acquaint more men and women with the advantages of improving their understanding of English, the publishers, Funk and Wagnalls Company, have printed full details of this speedy, pleasant method in a booklet which they will send to anyone who requests it. The address is Funk and Wagnalls Company, Dept. WP-910, 153 East 24th Street, New York 10, New York. A penny postcard will do. There is no charge for the booklet.

A MODERN NOVEL OF SEXUAL DEVIATION

JAMES BARR

THIS is primarily the story of two young men, Phillip Froelich and Tim Danelaw, who are irresistably drawn to each other. Both are in every obvious respect what is generally termed masculine. There is no suggestion of the effeminate—nothing that could evoke the characterization of gay. Their backgrounds and personalities are thoroughly American, and they live and work in a completely normal man's social and professional world. Other men respect and admire their courage and ability and even their physical prowess. Women are very much attracted to both of them.

Tim, the older of the two, has already recognized and resolved the problem of his sexual deviation. Phillip has not. A product of rural American mores and attitudes, he has a fierce contempt for "queers" and at the same time a deep and secret dread that the germ of homosexuality may be buried somewhere within himself. One or two incidents in his life have shaken him profoundly and have made him determined ruthlessly to crush any tendencies in himself as well as to avoid any close relations with other men. He is engaged to be married as soon as he is discharged from the Navy, and he intends to rear a big family, to take over the operations of his family's bank and other interests, and to become a responsible and civic-minded leader in his community.

As the story opens, he has almost reached the refuge and security he has so carefully planned. But then he meets Lt.-Comdr. Tim Danelaw. From that moment the struggle begins—a tense and shattering emotional upheaval composed of aversion, self-contempt, admiration and—finally—love.

There are other well-drawn characters in this drama—Phillip's exceptional family; his fiancée and her mother; Tim's fascinating wife; Lt. Bruner, the blackmailer; Stuff, the hardboiled sailor who worshipped Phillip.

QUATREFOIL is a deeply moral novel. Two men of integrity and intellect are confronted with the knowledge that they are deviates from the normal pattern of our society—that most people in that society would abhor and persecute them if they openly avowed their difference. Both men avidly desire to live within the social conventions and to attain the ends that motivate all men—a home, a family, respect in their community, an opportunity to do honest and satisfying work, to realize their ambitions.

This is their problem and QUATREFOIL is their story. It will evoke some disturbing thoughts.

Genetics Promises New Wonders

By Alton L. Blakeslee
Associated Press Science Reporter

NEW YORK.—You can look for new magic from the young science of genetics. One possibility is breeding new viruses that would destroy dangerous disease germs.

There may come new breeds of plants and animals—giant plants for bigger harvests and cattle that resist epidemic diseases. Or yeast factories growing protein food, or new corn so rich in sugar that it might compete with sugar beets and sugar cane.

Your blood may become as unique and sure a way of identifying you as your fingerprints now are.

These are all possibilities in the next 50 years, perhaps sooner, John Pfeiffer writes in "Genetics—The Science of Heredity," a new pumphlet from the Public Affairs Committee, (122 E. 38th st.), New York City, a nonprofit educational organization, in cooperation with the American Genetics Society.

The pamphlet is the first such nontechnical account of the science which partly determines why any living thing is just as it is. It appears on the eve of an international golden jubilee of genetics this week at Columbus, Ohio. It was in 1900 that the theories of Gregor Mendel, founder of modern genetics, were verified.

Since then, genetics has marked up solid achievements, through studies of inheritance and the tiny agents of heredity, the genes.

A FAMOUS ONE is hybrid corn, bred to grow to the same height with large ears. It was done by selecting parent stocks with genes of these desirable traits. A curiosity in 1932, hybrid corn now accounts for 75 percent of all the United States crop. Corn production in 1946 was 300 million bushels greater than in 1932, but took 23 million fewer acres of land. The extra hybrid corn in war years alone was valued at two billion dollars—the cost of the A-bomb project.

Yields of penicillin were boosted fourfold by genetic research. The molds producing the drug were bombarded with X-rays, which changed the genetic structure or heredity of some of the molds. Among them were molds that produced more penicillin.

From selective breeding, there are chickens that lay more eggs, pigs producing more bacon, beef cattle without horns. From human studies came knowledge of when there may be danger to newborn children from the blood RH factor.

The pace of new things will quicken as scientists learn more about heredity, how genes control inherited traits, perhaps even how changes in genes might be controlled at will, Pfeiffer writes.

"Fifty years ago, doctors could do little for victims of such inheritable diseases as diabetes and pernicious anemia. Patients were doomed by their heredity. Today their bad genes are controlled in an artificial environment of insulin or liver extract, and they live beyond their 'predestined' span.

"BUT NOW GENETICS has provided them with some of the weapons for a counterattack. Stillbirths and permanent brain injury can be avoided by blood typing in the case of the RH disease. Blood tests have recently been developed to detect genes for hemophilia and several types of inherited anemia in normal parents. New tests may make it possible to diagnose many other diseases rapidly and accurately—and to advise against marriages that might produce defective children."

"Mendel thought he had discoveved a rule about heredity in cultivated plants. Now we know what he found one of the keys to a riddle upon which depends our ability to control not only plant, animal and bacteria life, but the fate of our own human species as well. The more we learn about genetics, the better become our chances for health and prosperity."

NEW YORK.—How to ride the Gulf Stream in a ship is one object of a new radio survey by the Sperry Corp., United States Hydrographic Office and United States Coast and Geodetic Survey. A year ago it was observed that, near its center, the stream runs five to seven miles an hour. But this central stream is only a few miles wide, and it may fluctuate from side to side. By picking this narrow current, the Sperry labatory ship raised its cruising speed by five knots and saved eight hours in a three-day run. It is hoped to chart this fast current to speed northbound ships and to enable southbound vessels to avoid the rip.

THE TUNING-FORK earthquake is the name John M. Cage, Upper Montclair, N. J., gives to the great shake of August 15. He says that quakes do not come from slips of the earth, as seismologists say, but that the slips are caused by the quakes.

Cage says quakes are really vibrations in the ether, the hypothetical substance that scientists used to believe filled all space. There is still no definite substitute for ether and Cage says it is reasonable to hold to the old idea.

A tuning fork will vibrate when an air vibration comes along to which the fork is sensitive. It will not vibrate to a vibration to which the fork is not tuned. The earth, in Cage's explanation, is a tuning fork. The ether vibrations set the earth to vibrating, or some parts, depending on the sensitivity or tuning of various kinds of rocks and soil.

The proof, Cage says, is when a vibration comes along that shakes the entire earth. The August 15 quake, he says, was that kind of vibrator, and the first one of its kind. In proof, he says this shock was felt all over the world at approximately the same time. Quake shocks usually take a long time to reach distant places. Not this one. It seemed to travel 1000 miles a second, which is far too fast to be accounted for by ordinary vibration travel.

HOW THE bodies of 32 men who cut their daily calories very low compensated for the loss, is told in Science. The experiments are reported by Ancel Keys and Henry Longstreet of the laboratory of physiological hygiene, University of Minnesota.

The calories were cut nearly in half. Their production of energy, known as the basal metabolism rate, dropped about one third. Size of heart muscles decreased 17 percent, body weight dropped 24 percent. Body temperature fell a little, but less than one degree. The men said they felt weak and depressed.

Indian Mediation Plan Strongly Backed

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

THE PROPOSAL of Prime Minister Nehru of India that a committee of six of the smaller U. N. nations try to bring about a peaceful settlement of the Korean war, has very substantial support from American public opinion.

Public reaction to it is indicated in a Nation-wide survey just completed by the Institute in which interviewers asked a cross-section of the adult population this question:

"The representative of India in the United Nations (organization) has suggested that six member nations not directly involved in the war in Korea try to bring about a peace settlement there. Do you think this is a good idea or a poor idea?"

The vote:

Good idea	51%
Fair	10
Poor	25
No opinion	14

As outlined by Sir Benegal N. Rau, India's chief delegate to the U. N., the committee would be made up of the six non-permanent members of the Security Council—India, Norway, Yugoslavia, Ecuador, Cuba and Egypt, none of whom is directly involved in the Korean fighting.

WITH A CONSIDERABLE number of Americans wondering just how much aid in Korea will be forthcoming from other members of the United Nations, a public opinion survey just completed in Australia is of considerable significance in showing popular sentiment in one important country. It found that:

1—The Australian public overwhelmingly (5-to-1) approves the government's prompt action in sending a token force of airplanes and warships to Korea, and a substantial majority—57 percent— would like to see a much larger Australian air force go to the scene.

2—A very large majority also approves the government's plan to send a limited quantity of infantry and artillery. The vote shows 71 percent in favor of this, 20 percent opposed and 9 percent undecided.

3—Popular sentiment in Australia is overwhelmingly against American use of the atom bomb in Korea. The vote was 73 percent against, 18 percent for and nine percent undecided.

4—The Australians oppose arming Japanese troops to fight in Korea, the vote on this proposal being 53 percent against, 31 percent in favor and 16 percent undecided.

To Whom It May Concern . . .

SO HIGH WAS the alert over the Korean situation, the Quantico Marines the other day called their baseball team back from Wichita, Kans., where it was favored to win the National Semi-Pro Tournament . . . the decision apparently was made without regard to the defense fund's budget—the winners were to get a check for $10,000, and a free trip to Japan! . . . Ted Williams feels no pain from his fractured elbow when he hits the ball, it's when he misses that he winces . . . the baseball season's most untimely quote was Lou Boudreau's on August 27, when he took his Indians into Boston and announced, without being asked: "We'll win the pennant." . . . since that date, the Indians have blown two seven-run leads, a 12-1 lead, a 4-0 lead in the ninth, and won only four of their next 14 games . . . Maryland Coach Jim Tatum declares his top guard, Bobby Ward, is the only lineman he ever coached who gets a blank check to roam as he pleases on defense. "He knows more about his job than the coaches," confesses Tatum . . . Father Walsh of Notre Dame, discussing the sale of television rights to the Irish football games, recently said: "Trying to buck television is like trying to stop the Twentieth Century Limited with your bare hands." . . . other ex-champs are pricking an ear at the news Jack Sharkey is suing the television people who are now showing films of his old fights. Sharkey maintains that when he sold his equity in the films, the agreement didn't include video.

A month after the last brick was laid, Kansas voted wet in a special referendum . . . when Coach Herman Ball of the Redskins was in Denver, he started to discuss Redskin strategy with Bob Seymour, former fullback of the Skins who is now coaching at Denver U. Seymour reached for his hat and cut Ball off with, "Sorry, I can't listen. I'm scouting the Redskins this year for the Green Bay Packers." . . . Johnny Jachym, who reaped an $80,000 profit on his sale of 40 percent of the Nats' stock, is staying in the chips. He has already been guaranteed $75,000 for the television rights to the barnstorming tour of the National-American League All-Stars that will take to the road after the World Series . . . Jachym has rounded up the fanciest two teams of major leaguers that ever went on tour, and already has bids to take the show to Cuba, Mexico, South America and Japan . . . the George Washington team that scrimmaged the Quantico Marines last week will testify that Eddie LeBaron is the greatest faking quarterback they ever saw. Bucky Harris credits Irv Noren's skill as a baserunner to his talents as an outfielder. Pointing out that Noren has made no mistakes on the bases this season when fly balls were hit, Harris declared: "He knows more about where that fly ball is going than the outfielder who's trying to catch it." . . . the New York Boxing Commission has not yet designated the Louis-Charles fight as a title fight and is waiting for the stuffy formality of the actual signing of the contract.

Boston 1½ Games Back, Crowding Idle Yanks

Boston, Sept. 9 (AP).—Boston's Red Sox continued to inche forward in the American League pennant scramble today by twice thumping Philadelphia's inept Athletics 8-3 and 11-3.

By their two triumphs the Sox advanced to within a game and a half of the leading Detroit Tigers and to within a half game of the runnerup New York Yankees.

A happy throng of 22,153 watched the Sox sock the A's for the twenty-first consecutive time in Fenway Park. The A's last Boston victory was achieved in September of 1948.

A's Err Four Times

The A's made four errors of a chargeable nature and committed others which could not be assessed against them as Rookie Willard Nixon gained his seventh victory of the season in the opener.

The second game was put beyond the reach of the Philadelphians in the second inning when the Sox scored seven times. In the outburst both Bern Stephens and Al Zarilla hit two-run homers. Bob Doerr also homered in this game as the A's allowed Southpaw Alex Kellner to pitch the distance in absorbing his 17th defeat.

Stephens drove in four runs to tie Walt Dropo for the American League lead in that department with 137. Dropo sent one across the plate.

The Sox, play these same A's here tomorrow before beginning their last trip, now have won 22 of their last 25 games, 20 of 21 at home.

Walt Masterson pitched a shaky seven hitter in the second game to gain his eighth victory.

Dom Sparkles

Two sparkling defense plays by Dom DiMaggio saved Masterson trouble and amazed the fans.

In the third inning he ran in hard and just caught Ferris Fain's sinking liner at his knees. Two of the Y's were on base and both had to scramble back to avoid being doubled.

He made a similar and more daring one-handed lunge in the sixth at Kellner's expense. This time he pegged off balance to Bob Doerr at second to double up Kermit Wahl.

Houtteman's 18th Victory Puts Detroit Game in Lead

CHICAGO, Sept. 9 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers extended their lead over the American League field to a full game today by finishing some work they started April 30 against the Chicago White Sox on a winning 7-0 note. Art Houtteman blanked the losers on six hits to gain his eighteenth decision.

A crowd of 4529 watched the Tigers win the second playoff of this April 7-7 standoff by pounding three Chicago pitchers for 14 hits.

The victory proved Houtteman's fourth shutout of the season as lefty Billy Pierce suffered his sixteenth licking.

Detroit waited until the fourth to launch production designed to assure its victory. George Kell's double and Hoot Evers' single produced the opening run.

The Tigers added three runs in the fifth as Nelson Fox' fumble gave Detroit a big lift. During this spurt Vic Wertz singled for the first run, and Jerry Priddy's safety was good for two more.

Houtteman tripled over Dave Philley's head in deep center to set the Tigers in motion in the sixth as Pierce gave way to How Judson.

Don Kolloway's fly enabled Houtteman to score. Then Evers' third single powered Kell across.

Lou Kretlow became the third White Sox pitcher in the ninth when Judson was sidetracked for a pinch batter.

The Tigers pushed across their seventh run during Kretlow's reign on a walk to Swift, Houtteman's double, and Kolloway's fly.

Phils Win, 7-6, Run Lead to 6½

Jim Konstanty, Jones Team To Jolt Braves

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 9 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies increased their National League lead to 6½ games today as Willie Jones slashed a ninth inning single—his second hit in 27 times at bat—to beat the Boston Braves 7 to 6.

Eddie Waitkus led off the ninth with a single to right and Richie Ashburn sacrificed him to second. Jones, who has been in a paralyzing slump, took a ball and a strike from Relief Pitcher Mickey Haefner, and then blasted a hit to left scoring Waitkus with the winning run.

Jim Konstanty, the Phils' premier relief hurler, was credited with his 14th victory against five defeats in his 64th appearance this season.

Konstanty, however, was not his usually reliable self. The Phillies broke a 4-4 deadlock with two runs in the eighth on a double by Del Ennis, bunt single by Rookie Jack Mayo, single by Granny Hamner and single by Mike Goliat. But in the ninth, Earl Torgeson singled and Bob Elliott pickled one of Konstanty's pet sliders into the left-field seats for his 21st homer of the year.

That set the scene for Jones to send 24,488 fans, including 9,159 kids admitted free, home happy.

The only unhappy note for the winning Phillies was the last appearance of starting pitcher Curt

Wants Ford to Have Rest

Stengel Happy Nats' Series Start Is Delayed by Rain

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Casey Stengel, who says his Yankees are on the road trip that will make or break 'em, was grateful for yesterday's rain that postponed another immediate test with the fifth-place Nats.

Happily agreeing to stay over on Monday and fill an open date at Griffith Stadium, Stengel declared "it's a nice extra day's rest for our kid pitcher, Eddie Ford."

Young Ford, whose five wins without a defeat have given the Yanks a tremendous lift in the hectic stages of the race, was originally supposed to pitch today but he won't figure in the doubleheader between the two clubs.

"Ford was showing signs of getting a little bit ragged," said Stengel, "any game we lose now could be a bad jolt. And anyway, the Senators have been no pushovers for us all season."

Harris Names Hudson, Kuzava

The fifth-place Washington club has his complete respect, Stengel added. "We've found them tougher to knock over than the top clubs. I'm always glad to get away with a win over the Senators."

To beat the Nats today, Stengel will have to get past Sid Hudson and Bob Kuzava. He'll try to do it with Tommy Bryne and Vic Raschi.

It's no accident that Manager Bucky Harris has Hudson and Kuzava ready for the Yanks. Nothing would please him more than knocking out of the race the team that fired him a couple of years ago for failing to win two pennants in a row.

Thus far this season, the Nats have won seven, lost eight to the Yankees, who hold more of an edge over the Red Sox, Indians and Tigers.

Stengel declares the Indians were a personal disappointment to him last week. "I thought they'd go into Briggs Stadium and knock over the Tigers in a couple of

Maglie Stops Dodgers, 2-0, For His 4th Shutout in Row

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (AP).—The New York Giants' Slick Sal Maglie, the former Mexican League outcast, tied the National League record for consecutive shutouts today when he beat the Brooklyn Dodgers, 2-0, for his fourth straight whitewashing.

Maglie, who now has tossed 39 scoreless innings in a row, was aided no little by Alvin Dark who accounted for the entire New York run production with two home runs. The National League record for the consecutive scoreless innings is held by Carl Hubbell, another Giant—46 1/3—in 1933—Maglie's triumph was his tenth in a row and fifteenth of the season.

Maglie knocked the Dodgers another full game behind the league-leading Philadelphia Phils, who beat Boston, 7-6.

Four others—Mordecai Brown, Grover Cleveland Alexander, Ed Reulbach and Bill Lee—have thrown four straight shutouts for a National League club. Only Lee's feat in 1938 when he was with the Chicago Cubs, was accomplished in the modern era.

G. Harris White of Chicago holds the all-time major league record for consecutive shutouts, 5. That was in 1904.

As for the game, it was a battle all the way between Preacher Roe and Magliei. The Preacher who was charged witih his tenth defeat, hurled creditably and yielded only six hits. But his perchant for throwing home run balls proved his undoing.

Dark connected for his fourteenth of the season in the first and his fifteenth in the sixth. Roe gave way to Dan Bankhead in the eighth, and the latter immediately got himself in a jam when he loaded the bases with one out. However, he fanned West Westrum and got Ray Mueller on a grounder.

The Brooks made their most serious threat in the ninth. Gene Hermanski opened with a single, and went to second on an infield hit by Duke Snider. Gil Hodges bunted, but forced Hermanski at third. Carl Furillo flied out and Cal Abrams, batting for Bobby Morgan, was called out on strikes.

Bartell Barred for 6 Days, Fined $50 By Harridge for Row With Hubbard

CHICAGO, Sept. 9 (AP).—Coach Dick Bartell of the Detroit Tigers today was suspended six days and fined $50 by President Will Harridge of the American League for a run-in with Umpire Cal Hubbard last Thursday.

Bartell officially was notified of Harridge's action today, although he was removed from last night's game against the White Sox here before it started. He will be eligible to return to coaching duty next Thursday.

Bartell was banished during the Tigers' 13-13 tie with the Cleveland Indians at Detroit Thursday after vigorously protesting a decision by Hubbard.

Coach Rick Ferrell was moved to the Tigers' third base coaching box for Bartell's enforced vacation.

Collapsing Indians Drop Third In Row to Brownies, 2-1

Cleveland, Sept. 9 (AP).—Cleveland' collapsing Indians dropped their third in a row tonight to the St. Louis Browns, 2 to 1. The defeat dropped the Tribe to six and one half games behind the leagueleaing Detroit Tigers.

Upton scored the other St. Louis run, too, with a home run into the lower left field stands, his second of the season, as a ladies night crowd of 25,813 looked on in disgust.

Pitcher Ned Garver found the battered Indians pretty easy to fool. Their one run came in the sixth inning and even that was unearned. Larry Doby scored from second when Hank Arft threw wide to the plate.

That meant that the Indians, who only a few weeks ago had big ideas about the pennant, have not scored an earned run against the Browns in their last 27 innings. Garver allowed only five hits tonight.

Irish Rebuilding for 5th Unbeaten Season

Bob Williams Expected to Spark Team

By Jerry Liska

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Sept. 9 (AP).—They'll have to catch Notre Dame surging out of the chute this football season because once the rebuilt Irish start rolling, it may be to a fifth straight unbeaten season.

Gone are All-America Leon Hart, Emil Sitko and Jim Martin, along with seven other first-stringers who helped Notre Dame slam to the No. 1 spot in the 1949 Associated Press poll.

But from the wreckage of last graduation day, Coach Frank Leahy has salvaged a super quarterback, a dozen tested performers and a batch of swift, sturdy lads whose anonymity may be short-lived.

"This squad should get better every seven days," significantly appraises Leahy, who likes his first eleven but wonders about reserves.

North Carolina First Test

It's then a race of time for Notre Dame opposition to reach the glory road by shattering one of the greatest streaks ever wrought by a collegiate eleven. Since the beginning of the 1946 season, Notre Dame has won 36 and tied 2 for a defeatless string of 38.

North Carolina, whipped by the Irish last season, 42-6, after a furious start at New York's Yankee Stadium, opens Notre Dame's season September 30 at South Bend.

Then the Irish take on, in order, Purdue, Tulane, Indiana, Michigan State, Navy, Pittsburgh, Iowa and Southern California. The finale against the Trojans, who may be Notre Dame's toughest foe, comes after an Irish open date.

Leahy's worries over the North Carolina opener stem not so much from a Tar Heel team which has lost Charley Justice and Art Weiner, but from the wrinkles in his own reconditioned machine.

Bob Williams Nucleus

Bob Williams, a slick quarterback of the Lujack stripe, is the balance wheel around which Notre Dame's victory drive must purr or sputter. Williams, who is 20—one year older than the Irish squad average—last season completed 83 of 147 passes and was a daring strategist.

Williams, Tackle Bob Toneff and Center-Captain Jerry Groom may prove as mighty a trio as were Hart, Sitko and Martin last season. Toneff at 235 and Groom at 215 are savage performers, ahead or behind.

Williams' ball-feeding will be mainly to Billy Barrett at right half, Bill Gay or John Petibon at left, and John Landry or Fidel Gander at fullback. A defensive star in 1949 as a sophomore, fleet, 190-pound Petitbon may be a real trouble-maker for Irish foes this fall. Barrett, a stumpy streak of speed, still is regarded a comer after a good sophomore season.

The Irish have nine sophomore halfbacks. Three are names like Ralph Paolone, 195, New Castle, Pa., and Johnny Whelan, 180, Miami, Fla., which may be fresh headline meat.

Tackler, Ends Below Caliber

The center of Notre Dame's line seems well-fortified with veteran guards Paul Burns, 208, and Fred Wallner, 212, flanking Groom. Sharing line-backing with Groom will be Byron Boji, 198-pound junior listed as a guard.

Excepting Toneff, the tackles and ends seem considerably below 1949 caliber. Chet Ostrowski and Jim Mutscheller, at 198 and 192, inherit the wing jobs of Hart and Bill Wightkin. John Helwig, 1949 line-backing guard, has been shifted to end. Another switch puts Bill Flynn, 197, a three-letter winner at end, at left tackle.

Top sophomore ends are Bob Kelly, Duluth, Minn., and Vincent Meschievitz, a 215-pounder from Chicago. Guard Tom Seaman, Canton, Ohio, and tackles Walt Czaja, Niagara Falls, N. Y., Virg Bardash, Gary, Ind., are other strapping first-year prospects.

The Irish don't look invincible right now but if North Carolina, Purdue or Tulane don't stop them, Leahy's forces could jell into something pretty terrific again.

Terps Drop Practice Game to Villanova, 18-6; Hoyas 'Have Long Way to Go'—Margarita

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Maryland got its first football licking of the season yesterday, dropping a 6-quarter scrimmage to Villanova, 18-6, at College Park.

The heralded Terrapins have been practicing for only a week and yesterday they looked the part. Villanova, which beat Army in a similar game last spring, has been at it for four weeks.

The Maryland tackling was anything but sensational. The blocking was poor and generally speaking the Terrapins of yesterday were no where near being the topflight team they are supposed to be this year.

"What did you expect, we haven't even had practiced defense yet this year?" Coach Jim Tatum explained to a group of Terrapin fans who wanted to know "wha hoppened?"

Joe Petruzzo, sophomore halfback from Mamaroneck, N. Y., was the Terrapin offensive standout. In the third quarter, he streaked 45 yards and followed it up with a 38-yard sprint off tackle for Maryland's only touchdown.

Had the scrimmage lasted only four quarters, Maryland would have won on the strength of Petruzzo's run. Operating against the Maryland third and fourth stringers, the Wildcats scored once in the fifth quarter and twice in the last period, all three on the ground. The rain made passing virtually impossible.

Tackles Ray Krouse, who seldom plays offense, Bob Dean and Guard Bobby Ward supplied the fleet-footed Petruzzo with some nifty downfield blocking on his TD run. It was the only blocking display by a Maryland player all day.

Johnny Idzik, competing against Sophomore Jack Scarbath for the first string quarterback job, was smothered practically every time he took the ball from center. Scarbath, who played two quarters despite breaking two fingers in practice Friday, fared a bit better.

Tatum said he was satisfied with his team's performance, which is quite an upset for the usually gloomy Tatum.

"We'll get better, don't worry," he asured Maryland fans who were worrying.

Middies Whip Jayvees, 42-0, On Wet Field

Special to The Washington Post

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Sept. 9.—Coach Eddie Erdelatz's Navy footballers thrashed the Middie jayvees today, 42 to 0.

Preparing for their September 30 opener against Maryland, the Middies scored in every period despite rain and mud.

Erdelatz used 36 of his 38 varsity performers. End Tom Bakke, team captain, and Center Ted Kukowski, were withheld from the scrimmage. Both are suffering minor injuries.

Erdelatz had hoped to practice on the Navy passing attack, but a steady rain which greeted the Middies when they took the field at 3 p. m. and continued all through the session, washed out his plans.

It was the third scrimmage for the Middies and also wound up their second week of practice, most of which has been spent working on offense. Starting Monday, Erdelatz will devote the next few days to defensive work.

Syracuse Coach

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Sept. 9 (AP).—Marc Guley, 38-year-old one-time captain of the Orange cage team, today was named Syracuse University's head basketball coach.

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

For a football coach, it's always later than he thinks . . . With about 15 practice days before the September 30 opener with always formidable Penn State, Georgetown's Bob Margarita had his squad splashing through a two-hour scrimmage yesterday . . . When the rain-bedraggled lads made their way to the locker room, pessimistic Margarita sighed, "We've got a long way to go."

The steady rain didn't make for good footing, but Sophs Art Gulla and Al Confalone each broke away for 30-yard gains . . . Gulla is fast and slippery but, at 160 pounds, quite small . . . Bugs Thompson, running with the B team in an effort to even things up, also got loose for a 30-yard run . . .

Margarita said the downfield blocking was the most encouraging phase of the workout . . . "It was as good as any I've seen up here," he said . . . The youthful coach called Guard John McGinn, "the best lineman on the field" . . . It wasn't the first time McGinn was signalled out for praise . . . He's a 210-pound sophomore from New Orleans, La., and looks like an outstanding prospect . . .

Biggest pre-season surprise is that Frank Mattingly, regular quarterback last year as a soph, is rated behind Capt. Tommy Hardiman for the No. 1 spot . . . Mattingly ranked 28th nationally last season as a passer . . . Hardiman for most of the season led the country in pass interceptions and played almost entirely on defense in the safety position . . . Mattingly pitched for Joe Judge's Hoyas last season, passing up spring practice . . . Hardiman also played baseball but dropped around frequently to look over the squad he will lead . . . They say Hardiman's a much better ballhandler . . .

Babe Baranowski made a surprise appearance on the Hilltop yesterday. . . . Not quite the "old grad," Babe has to make up credits in history and government to get his degree. . . . The Chicago Cards took a brief look at Baranowski this summer, but decided he was "too small . . ." Center Vic Banonis still is with the Card squad, understudying Brother Vince. . . . Another visitor was Frank Alagia, basketball ace who achieved a measure of fame putting the "evil eye" on foul-shooting opponents . . . Alagia may get a chance to practice it in Korea. . . . He's at Quantico, undergoing officers' training after accepting a second lieutenant's commission. . . . Frank hopes to get in a little basketball with the Marines before completion of his six-month course. . . . He may be joined by Tommy O'Keefe, Georgetown's high-scorer who was signed by the Caps but probably won't be able to report because of pressure from his draft board. . . .

Eagles Favored Over Bears

CHICAGO, Sept. 9 (AP).—The champion Philadelphia Eagles were one-touchdown favorites over the Chicago Bears in their National Football League exhibition before an expected 40,000 at Wrigley Field tomorrow afternoon.

Since their defeat by the College All-Stars in mid-August, the Eagles have won three straight exhibitions, over the Detroit Lions, San Francisco Forty-Niners and Los Angeles Rams. The Bears have won three of five practice starts.

Tomorrow's game, starting at 2 p. m. (EST) is for the armed forces benefit.

Owner-Coach George Halas of the Bears disclosed that it was not certain that Guard Dick Barwegen, acquired from the Baltimore Colts, would report to the Bears. Barwegan was said to be reluctant to leave Baltimore where he has his home and business.

Up to 22 Real Players

Colonials Bigger, Should Be Better

(This is the first in a series of articles on Southern Conference and other area football teams.)

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

George Washington isn't going to a bowl game this year, but neither is it going to take many bad beatings.

For the first time in his three seasons at GW, Coach Bo Rowland has a fair-sized line with a moderate number of reserves.

In contrast to his "fightin' 15" of last year, Bo has 22 first-line players going for him.

Bo Rowland

On paper, it's one of the strongest GW teams since before the war, and the difference is the arrival of 14 highly promising sophomores from last year's unbeaten freshman team.

They place GW's manpower near the level of six of its opponents, VMI, West Virginia, VPI, South Carolina, Furman and Georgetown. Only Virginia, Wake Forest and Maryland have a clear-cut superiority.

Rowland hasn't gone overboard on his team yet. "I'm counting on too many untried sophomores in key spots to become optimistic," says Bo. "When I see those kids reacting the right way under fire, then, maybe I'll know we have something."

Just to prove he's leaning heavily on his newcomers, Bo points out that he'll throw in seven of them whenever the opposition gets the ball.

When the Colonials take the ball, reliable Andy Davis will try to move it for them. He's been among the Nation's 25 leaders in yardage gained for two seasons.

He'll have more help than he's ever had. Much of it will come from 190-pound Jack Baumgartner who, like Davis, is McKinley Tech high product.

Baumgartner is being groomed as Al DuGoff's successor at fullback. DuGoff, the team's only good breakaway runner last year, has graduated.

Jack can't run as fast as DuGoff, but Rowland insists he's every bit as smart a ball-carrier. "He runs hard and he knows how to follow his blockers," says Bo, "and he can do something DuGoff couldn't do—pass that ball."

When Davis or Baumgartner gets tired, there are Jimmy Kline and Charlie Jones, speedsters who can cover 100 yards in less than 11 seconds.

And Bo may have a surprise package in 5-foot 6-inch Bino Barreira, a high-strung scatback, who sprints and stops like a toy fox terrior; he can fake, and on occasion he has shown some passing ability. He comes from Hudson, Mass.

Even with his apparent wealth of running and passing backs, Rowland isn't enthusiastic.

"What good are they if we don't have a good blocking back?" he asks.

Stan Burak, whom Rowland converted from end into a very good blocking back last year, has graduated. There isn't a seasoned replacement on the squad.

Dave Shiver, an end last year, and George Semkew (Peckville, Pa.), up from the frosh, are getting first cracks at the blocking job.

"It takes a year or so to develop a good blocking back. Both of those boys are a year away," says Rowland.

Where GW's foes will feel the real impact of the Colonials new manpower is in the line.

Line Coach Bo Sherman believes he has a crackerjack in Tom Flyzik, 235-pound tackle from Coaldale, Pa. Flyzik likes to play rough, and he can give most of the GW backs a good foot race.

Flyzik along with Frank Continetti (Selvay, N. Y.), 215 pounds, and John Sestokas (Scranton, Pa.), 230, led last year's frosh in their upset over Maryland's touted yearlings. They're available to the varsity along with Jim Feula, 195, and Clarence Drayer, 195, GW's best tackles of a year ago.

Art Kojoyian and Charlie Gunner, 180-pounders who were regular guards, are back again, and they'll get weighty help from Sophs Bob Allwine (Anacostia), 195; Bob Gutt (Jersey City), 195, and John Wojtowicz (Elizabeth, N. J.), 210.

Davis' favorite pass targets last year, Charlie Butler and Bill Szanyi, may be beaten out of their jobs by big, fresh sops, Fotis Karousatos, 210, former Central High tackle, and Jim England, 205, Newark, N. J.

Talbot Dredge, guitar plucking cowboy from Shelley, Idaho, will do most of the centering when GW is on offense. Rowland is hoping that Fred Samuelson will become as good a line-backer as Johnny Grinnell was last year. Grinnell graduated.

TOMORROW: Georgetown.

Three Rings, Second Choice, Wins Aqueduct 'Cap

Beats Miss Prime

Hy Equals Track Mark At Timonium

TIMONIUM, Md., Sept. 9.—Mrs. Helen Reightlers Hy equalled the six and a half furlongs track record of 1:21 1/5 today in scoring a neck victory over James N. Barnes' Miss Prime, the favorite, in the Baltimore County purse, closing day feature before a crowd of 9,683.

Under a powerful ride by Mike Sorrentino, leading rider here, Hy came up on the outside with a burst of speed to win going away over the 13-10 favorite who had taken command in the run down the backstretch on the $1200 headliner.

E. R. Myers' Ballinakill, who led for a half mile, faded to third, two and a half lengths back of Miss Prime and a half length clear of Mrs. Leona M. Carver's Eagle Speed.

A slight drizzle started prior to the feature but the track remained fast. Hy paid $7 in the straight betting.

Ballinakill and Roundelay led early but Stanley Austin sent Miss Prime up on the inside entering the backstretch to be leading with a quarter of a mile left. Sorrentino, meanwhile, had called on Hy for speed and the brown filly responded to be second a sixteenth from the end. In the final stages, Hy passed Miss Price to get the photo decision.

In the preceding race S. H. Rogers' Gunner lasted to beat Jerry McCarthy's Longtide by the thinnest of whiskers in a 6½-furlong sprint. It was so close the placing judges were forced to use a microscope. Sand Rose finished third as Gunner paid $14.20 in beating the public choice.

The first four races were won by favorites with the daily double returning a mere $11.80.

French Horse Wins St. Leger

Doncaster, England, Sept. 9 (AP).—Rae (Bill) Johnstone, Australian-born jockey, and Scratch II, a French-bred colt, combined today to win the classic St. Leger race and break a 70-year jinx.

No French horse had won the St. Leger, oldest of England's three classic races, since Rayon D'or in 1879. In fact, French horses had won only two races here since World War II.

And Johnstone never had been able to triumph in the St. Leger although he generally is regarded as Europe's best rider and had won the other British racing fixtures.

But today the invaders couldn't be stopped. Scratch II made his move 200 yards from the finish of the mile 6-furlong and 132-yard test and defeated Vieux Manoir, the favorite, by a length.

Time for the odd distance was 3:08 4/5, far from the record of 3:01 2/5 set in 1934.

Scratch is owned by Marcel Boussac, French textile king, whose thoroughbreds also have won the Oaks and the Derby this season. The prize money of $39,085 made Boussac the heaviest 1950 money-winning owner on British tracks.

Omolecki, Sayers Gain Golf Finals

Dorothy Omolecki of Rock Creek golf course and Louise Sayers of East Potomac gained the finals of the Women's District Public Links tournament at Fort Dupont yesterday.

Miss Omolecki beat Audrey Cook of Fort Dupont, 4 and 3, and Miss Sayers won over Carol Hardy of Fort Dupont, 5 and 3. The finals will be played today.

Wistful, My Request Finish 2-3

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (U.P.).—It didn't rain at Aqueduct today, so the thirty-first running of the $20,000 added Edgemere Handicap turned out to be easy pickings for Mrs. Evelyn L. Hopkins' Three Rings.

The 5-year-old brown gelding, who has come to be known as the "rain-maker" in recent months, reached the end of the mile-and-a-furlong event almost three lengths clear of Calumet Farm's Wistful. Ben Whitaker's My Request was third, a half length back of the Calumet filly.

Three Rings has been scratched from a number of major stakes this summer because of rain and sloppy going, which he frowns upon. That's how he got his nickname. Every time three Rings is entered in a race it rains.

But it was a warm, clear day at Aqueduct today. And the track was fast, just the way Three Rings likes it.

Given this break in the weather, Three Rings ran one of his best races. He hustled to the front as the field of 11 whizzed past the stands the first time and he easily remained on top the rest of the way.

My Request chased the winner over most of the route and looked as if he was ready to take charge at the top of the stretch. But Hedley Woodhouse whipped Three Rings a few times at that point and the Hopkins' charger pulled clear of his rivals in the run through the stretch.

Wistful, the only filly in the field, uncorked a good stretch run in gaining the place spot ahead of the tiring My Request.

Three Rings' time for the event was a nifty 1:49 2/5, just two-fifths of a second off the track record. He paid $9.10, $6.20 and $4.60 across the board. Wistful was coupled in the betting with Fervent, who finished 10th. The Calumet entry paid $6.60 and $4.70. My Request returned $4.80 for show.

Foxcatcher 'Chase Won By Canford

FAIR HILLS, Md., Sept. 9.—Mrs. Esher duPont Weir's Canford, brought out of retirement for the occasion, set a course record in winning the Foxcatcher National Cup Steeplechase today.

The eight-year-old gelding led every jump of the way to get home ten lengths in front of the closest opposition in the test of more than three miles, over 19 brush-jumps—one of the most gruelling horse races on this side of the Atlantic.

Happy Hill Farm's Adaptable came from last position to be second with Bayard Sharp's Lieut. Well third. Richard K. Mellon's Replica II, winner of the 1948 and 1949 renewals, was fourth with Mrs. C. E. Damse's Refugio fifth.

Canford, making his first competitive appearance since he won the spring maiden steeplechase at Belmont two years ago, carried the light weight of the field, 141 pounds, and was faultlessy handled by Apprentice Jockey Joe Snyder. His time of 5:58 4/5 sent into discard the course mark of six minutes registered by Carroll Bassett's Corrigan in 1941.

Despite threatening weather (a few scattered showers fell) — a crowd of 10,000 turned out for King Horse's one-day annual stand here under the auspices of William duPont, jr., and his associates of the Cecil County Breeder Fair Association.

Tennis star Mrs. Margaret Osborne duPont presented the Foxcatcher trophy to Mrs. Weir, owner of Canford. In addition to other awards, Canford took down $2723.-20 of the purse grossing $5100.

While the Foxcatcher was run without a bobbling jump, the Fair Hill Chase was marked by a mishap when F. Ambrose Clark's Flying Wing fell heavily, Jockey Elwood Carter suffering bruises

The victory was another duPont one. Mrs. Marion duPont Scott's Sea Legs, representing her Montpelier estate, was the winner.

A Leading Broker in Hotel and Restaurant Field Uses The Post for Quick, Profitable Returns

"I've been a constant user of Post Business Opportunity advertising since 1923, and have always had good results."

Bob Hollander is a business broker, and a specialist in the hotel and restaurant field. Mr. Hollander's been getting sales-producing action from Post want ads for twenty-seven years.

A recent example of his success was the sale of the States Restaurant. As soon as the restaurant was turned over to him, he placed a classified ad in the Post about it. Right after the ad appeared, a reader who had seen it contacted Mr. Hollander, and ultimately bought the restaurant.

As a result of this 14 line ad in The Post, Bob Hollander completed what a trade magazine called, "One of the largest restaurant deals made solely through an ad."

This is another example of the quick, profitable results available to Post Business Opportunity advertisers. Whatever you have to offer, a low cost Post classified ad can bring you similar results—same day action and quick sales.

The opportunity to use this business-producing medium is closer than just around the corner. It's as near to you as your telephone. Just call National 4200 and ask for Classified. A trained ad writer will help you word your ad for most profitable results.

Raffensberger Hits Homer, Drives In 4 Runs, Reds Win Two

Kluszewski Clout Takes Opener, 7-4

CINCINNATI, Sept. 9 (AP).—A three-run pinch-hit homer by Phil Cavarretta in the nightcap fell short today as the Cincinnati Reds took a 7-to-4, 7-to-5 doubleheader from the Chicago Cubs.

The double loss put Chicago three games behind the sixth place Reds.

Kenny Raffensberger surprised by driving in four runs on a homer and single in the opener as he helped himself to his thirteenth victory. Ted Kluszewski's twenty-third home run broke a 4-4 deadlock in the sixth inning of the first game while Hal Jeffcoat homered for the losers.

Willie Ramsdell pitched shutout ball for Cincinnati in the second game for the first six innings as his teammates gave him a 7-0 edge. Then the knuckle-ball artist weakened visibly and had to be relieved in the eighth.

Cavaretta's ninth-inning homer off reliefer Frank Smith with two down made the score 7-5, but Ewell Blackwell came on to strike out Carmen Mauro for the final out.

games, but they blew one and tied one and that didn't help us."

He isn't flatly predicting a pennant for the Yankees, but he likes their chances. "It looks as if Cleveland is out of it. That double jolt the Browns handed 'em was awful. They were going bad before that. They went into Boston and scored 22 runs in two games and dropped both."

He admitted a new respect for the Red Sox. "They have more hustle now than any Boston team I've ever seen. They're legging out hits, and racing everywhere to win games. Steve O' Neill has a good ball club going for him, except for the gamble he has to take with his pitchers."

So acute is Stengel's own outfield shortage with the injury to Gene Woodling, that the Yankee manager yesterday was prepared to restore Henrich to right field and gamble on Henrich's knee holding up. Henrich is expected to play one game today.

For the Monday date at the stadium, Harris and Stengel announced that the pitchers would be Al Sima for the Nats and Ford for the Yankees.

Nolan Upset By Pittman

Pittman was one down at the end of 17 when he sank a 40 foot putt over a rain-soaked gree to tie up the match. In another upset R. M. Hendrickson defeated C. T. Given, 1 up. Other results:

Mama's Mink Won't Sink—Its No Coat

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

IF NEW YORK wins the American League pennant, the Tigers should demand a saliva test. Didn't the Yankees buy Johnny Hopp from the Pirates to hop themselves for the stretch run? . . . Boats, like race horses, are named for anything. Sometimes there's a reason. For instance there's a motor cruiser on the bay tagged "Mama's Mink." It seems hubby saved up to buy mama a mink coat and then changed his mind . . . Jimmy Copper and Charlie Titone battled toe to toe in their fifth meeting. I understand their 137th clash (Gabe Menendez, matchmaker) has been booked for 1993 with the wheelchair, beard-pulling title of the old men's homes at stake . . . Maryland's Coach Jim Tatum reminds me of the craps-shooter who, after he made ten passes, threw box cars and muttered, "Ain't I unlucky." On the same day that a national magazine grid forecast picks the Terps as the Nation's No. 10 team and Guard Bob Ward as a potential All-America lineman, Tatum terms Maryland's first scrimmage, "The worst I ever saw." After hearing that, Navy is going to bring its second team to the new College Park Stadium Sept. 30. . . . Bob Nungesser, fishing lure expert, is a brother of Charles Nungesser, the French flier who was lost trying to fly from Paris to New York two weeks before our Lindbergh did the trick the other way . . . On television, at least, it appears that almost every big league first baseman has a habit of pulling his foot off the bag before catching a throw and the umpires continue waving runners out

Haight

"GORGEOUS GUSSIE" MORAN, of the tennis racket, and Shirley May France of the swim racket, have been offered wrestling jobs. Might be a good match—Gussie in her lace panties and Shirley May in her channel grease . . . In years to come, European fishing boat captains may bring their parties over to Chesapeake Bay. Shirley Povich, on vacation in his native Maine, took his boys to a sardine factory at which he worked as a youngster. Near the dock was a sign informing workers that until further notice the factory would operate only two days a week. Reason? Scarcity of sardines, partly due to Portuguese fishermen. Imagine sailing a thousand miles to catch nothing larger than a sardine? . . . Heinie Miller (boxing commissioner, retired Marine colonel, Maryland ring coach, magazine editor, etc., etc.) hasn't been particularly handsome since he boxed in his Navy gob days. However, he's justly proud of his beautiful granddaughter, Clay Keene Bernard, a member of the queen's court for the President's Cup Regatta. If Clay isn't thinking of Hollywood, perhaps grandpa is and, knowing Heinie, something could come of it . . .

PRIMO CARNERA, who wrestles Antonio Rocca at Griffith Stadium Monday night, has brushed up on his English since he became an American citizen and Yankee dollar collector. In contrast to the grunt that once followed each interrogation, Primo, asked in a recent interview if he would beat Rocca, came up with a drawing room "Naturally." . . . However, he's still sensitive about his big feet. Questioned on the subject, Carnera said he wears size No. 14 shoes. But I understand they are made by the New York Shipbuilding Co. and are launched on successive days . . . I second the motion of Ev (News) Gardner. The sharp first turn at Timonium should be rebuilt. Too many accidents there . . . the safest half-mile track is Cumberland's. Actually it is wider than Pimlico . . . I was talking sports with a Chinese friend and the subject was brought up about the lack of stars among the Chinese in baseball, football, tennis, golf, etc. He said that until recent years the Chinese children did not play any games that involved throwing a ball—not even a bean bag—which seems a logical explanation . . .

Bucs' 4-Run 8th Whips Cards, 5-4

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 9 (AP).—Four straight doubles, a sacrifice and then a single in the eighth were good for four runs, enabling the Pittsburgh Pirates to come from behind to beat the St. Louis Cardinals, 5-4, tonight in the first game of a twi-night doubleheader.

Bill Howerton got three doubles for the Redbirds, Ralph Kiner two for Pittsburgh.

The second game was called after 1½ innings because of rain. It can't be played tomorrow because a doubleheader already is scheduled.

Cardinal officials said it can't be played Monday, either, because both teams take to the road. Pittsburgh is slated for New York Tuesday and the Cardinals for Philadelphia the same day.

"You might say it's cancelled, as of now, unless we find a way of fitting it into the schdule later," a Redbird spokesman declared. "But the schedule doesn't seem to offer any possibilities."

Torn Ligaments in Thumb

Jackie Robinson May Be Lost To Brooklyn Rest of Season

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (AP).—From the rubble of the Brooklyn Dodger pennant hopes came trouble today—dire trouble. Jackie Robinson may be through for the season.

Robinson injured his hand in the first inning of the Philadelphia series last night. He played until the third inning, then left the game. It was believed to be a minor hurt.

But Robinson went to Temple Hospital to make sure, and in the early morning hours came the bad news: Robinson has two torn ligaments in his left thumb.

Dr. John Lachman at Temple put the hand in a cast and told Robinson he could not play baseball for three weeks.

"No," moaned Jackie. "No, no. It can't be. The doctor is wrong. I've just got to get back in there."

Dodger officials were not quite ready to give up. They knew that Robinson is out for the next few days, almost certainly a week. After that, it's a matter of how quickly the soreness goes. There is no fracture. But Robinson will have trouble gripping a bat for quite some time, and gripping a bat is what the Brooks want him to do most in this time of need.

The loss of Robinson coming on the heels of Catcher Roy Campanella's injury was almost more than the Flatbush faithful can absorb—and their capacity for absorbing punishment is notably great. Campanella has perhaps a week more to go on the sidelines because of a cut hand.

Manager Burt Shotton is a never-give-up-guy. But the attitude of the Brooklyn entourage was that this may be the last straw.

Leaving Philadelphia five-and-a-half games out of first place with three weeks to go was bad enough. Now a fight looms even to remain in the first division.

280-Yard Tee Shots

Boys Out in Missouri Show Timmons How 'Weak Washingtonians' Should Hit Golf Ball

By Dave Heller
Post Reporter

CHARLEY TIMMONS, Rock Creek golfer, is glad to get back among "weak" Washingtonians.

Says Charlie, "I spent my vacation at Carrolton, Mo., playing golf with the natives. Believe it or not, once I was in a foursome in which the other three guys overdrove the green on a 280-yard hole. All the time I was there it was like that. Those farmers around Carrolton (pop. 4000) are too strong. Some of them can hit a golf ball farther than the naked eye can follow. I'm glad to be back in Washington where people are weaker."

PROOF that the hand is indeed quicker than the eye comes from the sad experience of Al Farr at Kenwood recently. Al cut a gash in his golf ball, put it in his pocket and played out the hole with a new, expensive one.

On the next tee he decided to get rid of the cut ball. He set a ball on the tee, took a lusty swing, and watched it disappear into the woods with a smile of satisfaction. Then he put another on the tee, ready to play. You guessed it . . .

DICK TINGLER, a Rock Creek linksman, admits that a little luck helps as much as a lot of skill. Dick's tee shot on the par three 14th hit a tree on the left side of the fairway, bounced off another on the right side of the fairway, and came to rest two feet from the pin. He holed his putt for a birdie.

His playing partners, Walt Bennett and Hobart Walker, swear the ball would have sailed into the next county if it hadn't hit the timber.

REMINDER: The Middle Atlantic Golf Association is holding a pro-am at Kenwood tomorrow.

Eleven-year-old Norma Brown won Prince Georges Kids' tournament with a 60 for nine holes . . . Bill Shea is defending champ in Congressional Club's championship tournament . . . Fred Guhrdes got a seven-under-par 65 on East Potomac's 6500-yard B and D courses yesterday.

DEADLINES: Friday: for the Maryland State Senior tournament. Entries should be sent to 16 McClellan Place, Baltimore. September 15: for the Men's Public Links championship. (Fourteen trophies in this meet.) Entries should be sent to Tee Gibraski, East Potomac Manager, ME. 7037.

INCIDENTIAL INTELLIGENCE: Frances Boczar got the first birdie of her golf career on the par four eight at Rock Creek. . . . Les Grim got birds on 11, 12, and 13 of the same course. . . . Bobby Brownell will be aiming for his fifth straight District Amateur title this week. He's walked off with the trophy every year since 1946 . . . Thad Jones had three birdies and an 82 at Bethesda . . . An exhibition between George Fazio and Claude Rippy vs. Brownell and Ralph Bogart may soon be scheduled at Washington . . . The exhibition at Bethesda was so popular that other clubs want to get a look at Fazio and one of their local boys in action against Bogart and Brownell . . .

Snead Fires Another 65 for 6-Stroke Lead

READING, Pa., Sept. 9 (AP).—Sammy Snead, who hasn't won a major golf tournament since May, sizzled home with a seemingly unbeatable 198 today as he grabbed a six-stroke lead at the three-quarter mark of the $15,000 Reading Open golf tournament.

The White Sulphur Springs (W. Va.) star fashioned his record score with a second straight seven-under-par 65 to take a commanding lead over Jim Ferrier, Australia-born San Franciscan, who fired a 67 today to pull into second place with 204.

Ted Kroll, New Hartford, N. Y., who held the lead at 18 and 36 holes, fell apart today, taking a four over par 76 that gave him a third round total of 208 and put him in fourth place in the tournament behind Ralph Blomquist, Glendale, Calif., and Glenn Teal, Jacksonville, Fla., who tied for third with 207s.

READING, Pa., Sept. 9.—George Fazio, Woodmont Country Club pro of Washington, D. C., shot a 71 today to give him 145-71—215. Maryland State Open Champ Charley Bassler from Catonsville, Md., had 145-70—215.

Salas, Williams Fight Here

Ike Williams, world's lightweight champion and Charley Salas, his welterweight conqueror from Phoenix, Ariz., have been rematched for a 10-round distance at Griffith Stadium September 25, two weeks from tomorrow night.

Salas, a veteran of more than 100 professional fights, scored one of the biggest boxing upsets of the year last month when he punched his way to an unanimous 10-round decision over the confused and surprised champion.

The tough little welter actually beat the champ with one hand as he chipped a bone in his right hand early in the battle, and had to depend on his left throughout the later rounds.

Salas' hand has healed completely, however, and he recently defeated Houston Brown in Phoenix to rack up his fourteenth straight victory of the year.

Williams' mouth was cut in the battle and he was forced to cancel out a return go with George Sugar Costner in Madison Square Garden this month, but the physicians have advised him he could accept the meeting with Salas.

Both New York and Philadelphia sought the rematch between the Trenton, N. J., champion and the Phoenix scrapper but their managers already had made a verbal agreement to fight here.

Redskins Scout Colts Again

For all of the Redskins except Head Coach Herman Ball, today is an off day.

Ball will be in Milwaukee scouting the Baltimore Colts in their exhibition against the Green Bay Packers. The Redskins, who have won all five of their pre-season games, open their National Football League season against the Colts in Baltimore next Sunday.

Ball apparently thinks the Colts are better than their 0-6 exhibition record indicates because it will be the second time in a week the Redskins have scouted the Colts.

Tommy Mont, assistant backfield coach, put the eye on the Mustangs in Shreveport, La., last Monday where they lost to the New York Yanks.

Two more Redskins bit the dust after yesterday's practice at American University. Guard John DeLaurentis, of Wawnesburg College, and End Alex Lloyd, of Oklahoma A. & M. were released, reducing the squad to 34, two over the player limit which must be met by next Saturday.

The auto thrill show scheduled for this afternoon at South Hampton, Md., Speedway has been postponed due to injuries suffered by Suicide Fowler, leader of the Hell Drivers group.

Saddler Now Seeks Second Title

By Jack Cuddy

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (U.P.).—Newly-crowned Sandy Saddler will defend his featherweight title in a fourth bout with Willie Pep in February if Sandy doesn't win the lightweight championship meanwhile.

That blueprint of Saddler's plans was developed today at the International Boxing Club as an aftermath of Saddler's title victory over Pep on an eighth-round technical knockout at Yankee Stadium last night.

Delighted with the $262,118 gate and the 38,781 crowd, Harry Markson, managing director, announced that the managers of Saddler and Pep had agreed to a fight at Madisos Square Garden in February "on a 30-30 basis."

He added, however, that brown-skinned, spindle-legged Saddler of New York might meanwhile try to wrest the lightweight crown from Ike Williams of Trenton, N. J.

Should Sandy win the 135-pound title from Williams, he would be forced by rules of the New York State Commission and the National Boxing Association to give up his 126-pound championship, despite his return-bout contract with Pep.

Markson said he was confident the New York Commission would permit Saddler to keep his feather diadem when he entered the ring as challenger for Williams' lightweight laurels and that if he lost to Williams, he still could defend the feather title against Pep in February.

Pep, who was unable to answer the bell for the eighth round last night because of a dislocated left shoulder, returned to his home in Hartford, Conn., today. He will receive $92,408 as his 45 percent cut of last night's net gate of $206,396. Saddler's 15 percent will be $30,802.

Each will receive 30 percent of the February net gate. That arrangement was stipulated in their return-bout contract. Percentages for their first two bouts were: (1) Pep 50, Saddler, 10; (2) Pep 30, Saddler, 30.

Dr. Vincent Nardiello of the New York Commission's staff said he had advised Pep to rest for eight weeks despite the fact that X-rays of Willie's injured shoulder disclosed no fractures. He said a long rest was required for the socket tissues to heal properly.

Markson was confident that a fourth Saddler-Pep bout would attract a good gate at the Garden because of last night's unsatisfactory ending of their third bout. Pep had a commanding lead at the end of the seventh round. Saddler had won only the third round, in which he floored Willie, and the seventh.

Now If It Gets Curtis . . .

Chamberlain Appears Deep

By Bill Gilbert

Coach Forest Powars at Chamberlain Vocation School is depending on depth and Halfback Mickey Curtis to give the Volts a successful footbal season.

Powars is almost sure of his depth, with more and better men out this year than last, but he's not so sure about Curtis.

Mickey, the most valuable man to Powars last year because of his all-around ability, dropped out of school last semester to accept a position as an engraver. It now looks as if Mickey may return to school.

Curtis, the Volts' Bill Dudley, was one of the few bright spots for Powars last year. He was the team's best punter, runner and passer and is described by Powars as "the kind of player any coach would be proud to have."

If Curtis does not return, Powars will rely on four boys who saw service last year to do the running. Stan Rochinski, an end in 1949, and Joe Kirby will be called upon for a good bit of the running and should receive help from Bob Ruth and Charles Stramer.

Two brothers, Tony and Erico Magnotto, will fight it out for a backfield berth. Tony saw action last year, but Erico is trying out for the first time after being sidelined with athlete's foot. Both boys are quarterbacks and whoever wins the battle should be the team's passer.

Two linemen who made honorable mention on the All-High team last season give Chamberlain some experience up front. They are Doug Pearson, an end, and 202-pound tackle Joe Bobbitt.

Powars has only 19 boys out for the team but expects to pick up 25 or 30 more tomorrow when school opens. Most of the boys have jobs during the summer and don't quit until school starts.

Powars lost five or six boys when their National Guard units were called up because of the war in Korea.

He isn't dejected, though. On the contrary, he seems happy about this year's team and its potential. He calls the 1950 squad the best he has had in four years at Chamberlain.

Accustomed to building for the next season, Powars says that "This year I'm building for this year."

Post Golfers Play Monday, Tuesday

The Washington Post Golf Association will hold its final tournament of the season Monday and Tuesday at Argyle Country Club. Three flights of golfers will participate.

By Happy Walker

Three outstanding rowing events feature today's activity in the President's Cup Regatta.

Coach Charlie Butt will depend on a substantial number of the H. S. Champion crew, who will make up the Potomac eight, to sweep the La Salle challengers.

Four crews will be on hand from the Virginia Boat Club of Richmond, who last year tripped up the Potomac lads in the last seconds of a hard fought quad race, outpointing the local oarsmen, for the coveted high point trophy.

A unique race will be the matched race between crews of the Girls Rowing Club, of Philadelphia. The club holds the Women's National Rowing Championship.

Regatta Chairman George Hernan revealed that while he was still expecting several late entries, the New York A. C., Neriod Boat Club of New Jersey, Batchelors Barge Club of Philadelphia, West Side Boat Club of Buffalo, Ravenswood Boat Club, N. Y. Backstroke Marks Fall In Cup Meet

Meet records in the boys' and women's backstroke events were broken as the President's Cup swim meet opened a two-day stand at the Indian Spring Country Club yesterday.

Mary Freeman of the Ambassador Swimming Club, Washington, in an afternoon trial heat, swam the 100-meter backstroke in 1 minute 20.2 seconds, breaking the old mark of 1.23.4, set by Bettie Roland of Takoma Park last year.

Miss Freeman broke the old mark again while winning the evening finals but in the slower time of 1:21. Pat Scott of the Y-Brook, Baltimore, also bettered the 1949 record in this race, finishing close behind the winner in 1:21.8.

Bill Fleming and Al Hobelmann, 14-year-old swimmers for Ambassador, both bettered the old record in the 50-meter backstroke for boys.

Fleming finished first in 36.2, breaking the 37.6 time set last year by Jim Bracken of the Baltimore Knights of Columbus. Hobelmann's time was 37.1.

The Maple Grove Swimming Club of Lanmaster, Pa., won the 300-meter medley relay in 3:37.8 and was awarded the President's Cup.

New Law Removing Limit On Rock Fish Advocated

By Ralph Murdock

Some time in the future—in the near future many anglers hope—it will be legal in Maryland for sportsmen to keep a rock fish "striped bass" of any weight.

Murdock

Removal of the 15 pound limit for rock caught on hook and line but the maintenance of this limit for fish taken by other means, highlights a report of a special committee set up to study this important sport and commercial member of the finny tribe.

Under the regulation, if the General Assembly agrees, hook and line anglers would be limited to one over 15-pounder per day. However, it would be illegal to sell or offer for sale a rock fish in excess of 15 pounds.

Virginia at present has a limit of 25 pounds but the majority of States on both the East and West Coasts have no limits on this species.

"Monk" Foster, chief of the Law Enforcement Division of the Maryland Tidewater Fisheries, aided in drawing up the recommendation.

He believes the one large fish allowed each angler would help rather than hinder the future of rock fish in the bay. An angler with his over-the-limit fish in the boat would be satisfied and less apt to destroy other top-size fish.

Although the scales (weighing of course) did not have to be consulted, Capt. Leon Langley, revealed that the predicted banner rock fish season is on the way. Friday, the famous Solomons Island boatman, guided a party including Bob Lusby into a catch numbering over 100 fish with the largest just under four pounds.

Blue Fish was the objective when leaving the dock but the northeast wind, blowing since Labor Day, was still at it and Captain Langley elected to try blind trotting against the north bank just inside the mouth of the Patuxent River. More than 30 were taken in this area. When the wind abated, the party went to the vicinity of the Old Cedar Point Lighthouse and completed the catch. Lusby lures of all colors were successful with the yellow head carrying off first honors.

Not a fish broke the water nor did a gull work. Only one blue fish was taken all day and that was not of keepable size. Someone suggested the nor'easter might have meant the beginning of the end for this fighter fish hereabouts. However, Lusby said they will be around until the first frost.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Inflation Pace Due For Check

The current postwar binge just cannot last. Shakespeare would describe the time as "out of joint." The rise in wages, prices, profits and dividends while United States troops are struggling 5000 miles away to hold a bridgehead in Korea is a political, social, and economic paradox.

Livingston

President Truman, himself, goes to the head of the class in Political Contradictions. Just when the morale of fighting troops should be high and rising, he, as Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces, insults the Marine Corps. Fortunately, the President retracted. But the faux pas suggests tension in Washington and a serious lack of perspective.

Walter P. Reuther, president of the United Auto Workers, gets the Phi Beta Kappa key in Labor Paradox-psychology. He admonishes Congress to restrict profits and keep down prices. But he's Johnny-on-the-spot getting wage boosts which inevitably push up the price level. Of the Ford agreement, he chortled, it's the "best in the industry." Yet it superseded a contract which took effect only six months ago. That's fast obsolescence!

Source of Higher Taxes

Chrysler Corp must share with General Motors and a host of others honors in Anachronistic Action. After Chrysler granted workers a 10-cent-an-hour wage boost, it voted shareholders a $3 special dividend. The company can well argue that the owners of the business are entitled to participate in increased production and profits. But that only builds up to future wage demands. And it makes higher individual incomes a logical source of still higher taxation when Congress convenes in January. Corporate dividends this year are 7 percent ahead of last year and are well above any year on record. In wartime they're a natural target as "unearned income."

The theme, everywhere is: "Inflationary days are here again." Wall Street brokers are sending out letters to customers reminding them that the purchasing power of the dollar dropped during the First World War and again during and after the Second World War. Inference: History's going to repeat. Conclusion: Invest in common stocks. If your own piece of General Motors or United States Steel or Pennsylvania Railroad, you own a share of the brick and mortar of their buildings, the technological capacity of their machinery and locomotives. So you have a hedge against inflation.

It's all so pat and unanimous! Yet, you can't get away from one stark fact: The Army sent out a Selective Service call for 70,000 men in November as against 50,000 in October and 50,000 this month. This war isn't localized in South Korea. It's reaching out into the homes on Main Street, Broadway, and Smith's Corners. More and more people are going to get concerned about what Senator Lyndon Johnson (D., Texas), heading the Senate Armed Services Preparedness Subcommittee, calls the "siesta psychology" in phases of the defense program. (This subcommittee is comparable to the former Truman Committe in World War II.)

Department Stores Buying Up 89%

Furthermore, America has done an awful lot of anticipating. Immediately after Korea, orders for automobiles jumped. "I won't go through another war without a new car," was a common expression. Housewives scurried after sugar, canned goods, and nylons. Business men figured they'd better get forward protection. Result, orders boomed.

Department stores are a good example. A group of merchants reported to the Federal Reserve Board an increase in commitments of 89 percent from June to July. True, department store orders usually rise in July. But not that much. The previous high was 49 percent in 1940.

As a result, the National Association of Purchasing Agents feels that the "sharp upswing started in July has about reached its top." Standard & Poor's Corp. suggests that "there may be a reaction this fall after much of the recent anticipatory buying has been digested and before military preparations swing into high gear."

The Federal Reserve Board courageously is taking the lead. It has served notice on bankers and business men that the credit spree is over. Yet the signficiance of its action in increasing the rediscount rate, from 1½ percent to 1¾ percent, hasn't sunk in. It means that the Federal Reserve really intends to clamp down on credit. Thomas B. McCabe, board chairman, would not have risked an open conflict over interest rates with Secretary of the Treasury John W Snyder if he hadn't meant business. It means that if the Reserve has anything to say about housing loans, such loans will be harder to get. It means that installment and consumer credit will be limited and even cut back.

The Reserve intends to reduce the money supply, to stop the increase in purchasing power at a time when the supply of goods for civilian consumption is likely to be reduced. At the same time, the tax bill will begin to cut more out of pay envelopes in October. And another tax bill is due next year. So the pace of inflation is due for a check. And the economic mood of the Nation, including Wall Street, is likely to undergo a change. All inflations, whether economic or emotional, have downs as well as ups.

Three Elevated To High Posts By Smith Firm

By S. Oliver Goodman

Election of three new officers was announced yesterday by Fred A. Smith, president of the real estate firm bearing his name at 1113 17th st. nw.

Richard A. Mott and William F. McIntosh were elevated to vice president, and J. Everett Bulgher was made auditor. All three are veterans of World War II.

Mott, a native of Norfolk, Va., lived there until he entered the Army in 1943. He was transferred to Washington in the Office of the Chief of Transportation. After leaving the Army in 1946, he joined the Smith firm.

McIntosh, a native of Prince Georges County, Md., was associated with the old Palais Royal department store from 1935 to 1941. He entered the Army as a private in 1941 and emerged as a major in 1946. He has been associated with the Smith firm since 1946.

Bulgher, a native of Westmoreland County, Va., came to Washington in 1939 and was in the real estate business until called to war duty. He served in the Air Force in the South Pacific.

Smith, currently president of the D. C. Building and Loan League, is a former president of the Washington Board of Trade. Other officers in his firm include J. Hawley Smith, vice president and treasurer; Fred W. Smith, vice president, and Ernestine M. Bulgher, secretary.

COLORFUL: Next spring a man can freshen up his shoe rack with rainbow-hued footwear, according to word from the New York Leather Show. There are such leather shades as tartan tan, American burgundy, town navy, cherrytone, sun earth, desert copper, forest green and burnished clay.

YIELD HIGHER: The average cash yield on August 15 of the 900 dividend-paying common stocks on the New York Stock Exchange was 7 percent. This information was contained in the latest edition of the most popular publication ever produced by the exchange. The 17-page booklet contains a tabulation of 285 common stocks that have paid a cash dividend in every year for 20 to 102 years. More than a million copies of the booklet have been distributed since last October when it was first published. The booklet was designed by the exchange to summarize elementary investment information.

ORDERS SOAR: Outstanding orders of Washington department stores on July 31 were 61 percent heavier than on the same 1949 date, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported. The stores' rush to buy apparently reflected fears of war shortages and possible delays in deliveries. However, stocks of goods on hand at the end of the month were 5 percent heavier despite a 10 percent increase in July sales.

OIL SURVEY: Oil company earnings ran behind last year in the first half of 1950, but the pick-up in the second quarter was so great that the outlook for 1950 as a whole is for an advance over last year, the Chase National Bank forecast. The bank's petroleum department surveyed the operations of 30 oil companies and found: Net income for the group was 706 million dollars for the first six months, a drop of 1.7 percent from the 1949 period, but earnings in the second quarter were 15.3 percent higher than in the 1949 period. This contrasted with a 16.4 percent drop in earnings during the first quarter, as compared with the previous year.

EARNINGS: Chickasha Cotton Oil Co. reported yesterday net profit in the fiscal year ended June 30 was $1,068,808 compared with $18,700 in the preceding 12 months. The profit was equal to $4.19 a share against seven cents in the earlier year. Sales totaled $31,103,982 in the latest 12 months against $25,257,065 in the previous year. The company operates 10 cotton oil mills in Oklahoma and Texas with headquarters at Chickasha, Okla. Other earnings reports follow:

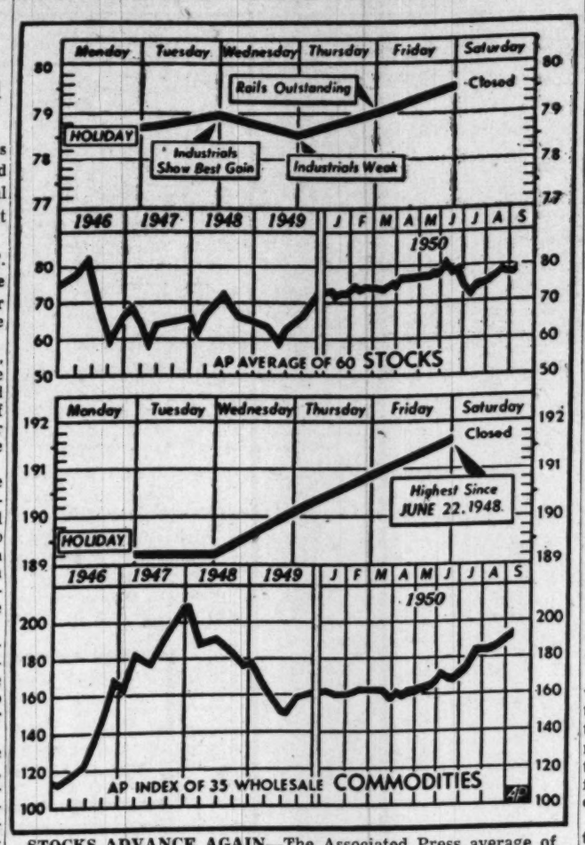
Interlake Steamship

CLEVELAND, Sept. 9 (AP).—The Interlake Steamship Co. announced today it plans to build a new oil burning ore-carrying vessel, first to be added to its fleet since early in the last war. This brings to five the number of new Great Lakes freighters scheduled for completion by the spring of 1952.

Market Trends at a Glance



STOCKS ADVANCE AGAIN—The Associated Press average of 60 stocks advanced last week for the second consecutive week, closing at 79.5 compared with 78.7 a week previously. The Labor Day holiday reduced the volume. The commodity index reached the highest level since June 22, 1948, when it ended the period at 191.6 against 189.2 a week earlier. All components of the index recorded gains, except livestock, which declined

Auto and Truck Sales Break All Records in July

DETROIT, Sept. 9 (AP).—The automobile industry's merchandising division smashed all retail sales records in July.

Reporting this today, R. L. Polk & Co., industry statisticians, said deliveries of passenger cars in July numbered 609,926 and trucks totaled 117,040 units.

It marked the first time in the industry's history that retail deliveries of new cars topped 600,000. The former record was 583,937 set in June of this year. In trucks the record mark was 108,168 set in April, 1948.

The Polk figures are compiled from new vehicle registrations in all States. They showed that nearly every State experienced a sharp upturn in registrations during July of this year.

Total new passenger car registrations from January 1 through July numbered 3,439,878 units. Truck registrations for the same period totaled 627,468.

Figures previously announced by the Automobile Manufacturers' Association show the factories delivered 3,607,446 cars and 687,930 trucks and coaches to domestic retailers during the year's first seven months.

Chicago Grain

CHICAGO, Sept. 9 (AP).—Buying on the part of local traders sent wheat up about a cent and lent a firm tone to the rest of the market on the Board of Trade today.

Major reason for the upturn was a news account in a local newspaper, not confirmed by the Associated Press, while the market was in session, that United States Department of Agriculture officials "reported" the Canadian wheat crop had been cut 100 million bushels by frost.

Wheat closed ¾@1¼ higher, corn ⅛ lower to ¼ higher, oats ⅝@1¼ higher, rye ¾@1⅜ higher, soybeans ⅛@1¼ higher and lard unchanged to 35 cents a hundred pounds higher.

The advance in lard was attributed in part to a request for offers of 1,325,000 pounds of cash lard by the Agriculture Department for Army shipment to Okinawa. Offerings are to be made by September 13 with acceptance not later than September 15.

Bearish News Fails to Check Rise in Stocks

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (AP).—An inflation-minded stock market buzzed close to a four-year high this week.

Stock traders ignored a generous helping of unfavorable news, news which ordinarily might be expected to give the market a man-sized wallop.

Instead, traders concentrated on fat dividends, high earnings, hopes that corporate cash registers would be kept jingling with record profits.

More important were new price advances in basic commodities and industrial raw materials, and the possibility that further increases might be around the corner.

Strong As Week Ends

Friday's trading was notable for the fact that stocks advanced smartly despite the approach of a long weekend which was scheduled to include President Truman's radio talk on the subject of economic controls. Usually traders shy away from vigorous action on a Friday on the theory that their positions might be endangered by upsetting weekend news.

Brushed aside just as casually was the revival of efforts to get through an excess profits tax in this session of Congress. The war news from Korea, disclosing new threats to the United Nations' forces, had little apparent effect on the price trend.

On only one day this week did the market lose ground. On Wednesday prices were cut back but it was due more to jaded buying appetites than to wholehearted selling.

Thursday railway stocks took over command of the market. Helped along by an official report of a steep increase in July earnings, plus an increase dividend by Seaboard Air Line during the day, the entire price list moved up.

Rails At 4-Year High

Friday the rails sparked another rise which included most of the market's pivotal issues. Both sales volume and the number of issues traded reached the highest level in three weeks.

The rails, on average, touched their highest point since June 1946, according to the Associated Press average.

Demand for carrier issues appeared to be based on pretty solid ground. July income, as reported by the Association of American Railroads, was almost double a year earlier. Increased operating efficiency—a main target for rail systems for some time—was clearly reflected in income figures.

Future income prospects for rail systems looked rosy. Not only was peacetime traffic at the highest level in months but in the offing and already present to a limited extent—was military demand for transportation.

New York Cotton

NEW YORK, Sept. 9 (AP).—The cotton futures market closed strong today.

Final quotations were 45 cents a bale lower to 1.75 a bale higher. The October, 1951, delivery was the only contract showing a net loss.

Early in the session the entire market was under pressure of liquidation which was carried over from Friday.

The selling movement, however, was short-lived and declines of about $1.50 a bale encountered new trade buying, and the rally got under way. On the upturn there was a shortage of contracts.

There was little news to account for the market's action, which traders described as being "nervous."

Saturday marked the first trading for the abbreviated session since the first week last June.

BEST THING ABOUT a horse show, you'll hear it said, are the parties that invariably follow it. Just ask the Washingtonians who spent the Labor Day weekend at the three-day Hunter Show in Warrenton, Va. Climax of the social whirl accompanying the sporting events was the dinner dance at Clovelly, the box-bordered colonial estate owned by Mr. and Mrs. Robert Winmill. The Warrenton Horse Show Association was host. Guests dined on Southern fried chicken, plus trimmings, on the front lawn of the mansion and later danced inside the house, under the old-fashioned low-beamed ceilings

Warrenton Host To Horse Lovers At Holiday Show

By Norma Lanum

WHEN IT'S round-up time in Warrenton, you'd hardly recognize the little town nestled in the hub of Virginia's hunt country. Just take a look at last weekend when hundreds of horse owners, horse lovers and horses from all along the East Coast poured into the town for the Warrenton Horse Show over the Labor Day holidays.

The quaint town, which is accustomed by now to opening its doors to horse followers from all over, was filled with visitors, both two-legged and four-legged.

And, true to tradition, Warrenton, a town that counts its wealth by the mounts in its stables, played the perfect host. Nary a one of the estates in the rolling environs of the town was left with an inch of extra sleeping space in bedrooms or stables.

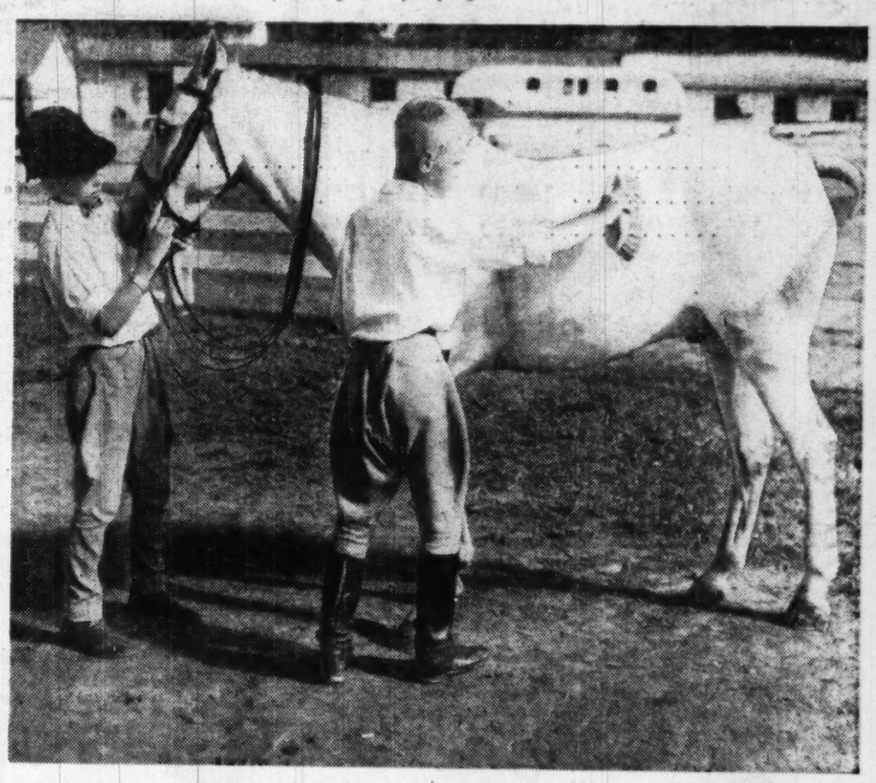
AND THEN there were all those parties. As soon as winners were announced for the final classes of the day the horse enthusiasts made a quick change from their tweed coats and derbies, high-top boots and riding crops, into backless formal dresses and flowers, white or plaid dinner jackets and black ties.

HORSE SHOW SPECTATORS are a roving lot. They may watch a few classes from the rail of the show ring, then join some friends in a box in the grandstands, or stroll over to see what's new in the warm-up rings.

Some of the exhibitors drive their Cadillacs and Chryslers right up to the show ring and view the contests from atop their cars. When hungry they just walk around to the back of the car, open up the trunk and serve drinks and sandwiches that they brought from home.

Enjoying a horseshow, you see, isn't limited to those who are experts of the sport. On the contrary, many folks come to the shows just to absorb the fresh air and meet old friends.

And whether they came as serious horseshow competitors or just as carefree spectators, Warrenton's weekend guests left with bolstered faith in good old-fashioned Southern hospitality.



LITTLE SPORTSMEN and little horses play an important role in any hunter show. And at the Warrenton show last weekend there were almost as many small fry as grownups handling the entries. William Russell Walther, jr. (left), son of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Walther, and Douglas Redgrave, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lester Redgrave, all of Fredericksburg, give a white pony named Pinocchio final grooming before his contest. The pony is owned by Nelson Berry of Falmouth, Va.

HORSE SHOWS are an important event in the social life of the younger set, too. Miss Laura Bell Watts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Watts of New York, came all the way from Great Neck, Long Island for the three jampacked days of equine contests

EDWARD R. STETTINIUS, 3d of The Plains, son of the late Secretary of State, and Miss Eve Prime watch opening contests of the Warrenton hunter show

Eight Designers Represented

Paris Fashions Stage Autumn Invasion

By Peggy Preston

FASHION, in its most elegant form, has invaded Washington once again. It comes from Paris, and one finds it in a group of spectacular fall imports, representative of eight of the great couture houses of Paris.

Twice each year, in the spring and autumn, groups of imports reach Washington shortly after the fashion openings in Paris. This latest collection, brought here by Julius Garfinckel & Co., is one of the largest and most varied to date. It includes 23 garments, ranging from coats to ball gowns, and scores of accessories such as blouses, scarfs, shoes, gloves, jewelry and handbags.

ITS INITIAL showing here was staged in Garfinckel's newly opened French Boutique—a unique shop copied after the little specialty stores of Paris. Elegant in decor, the room provides a beautiful back-drop for the couture accessories and gifts that are displayed there. And, against its champagne, rose and gold colors, and velvet draped furniture, the exotic, exaggerated fashions of Paris seem completely at home.

Practically all the "name" designers of Paris are represented in the collection. Dior, of course, is there with several of his outstanding pieces. Then, there are Pierre Balmain and Jacques Fath, who along with Dior, have visited Washington on several occasions. Schiaparelli has two gowns, and in addition, there are Molyneaux, who designs for Britain's royal family; Jean Desses, Balenciaga, and Griffe.

One dress that gives promise of being copied and recopied throughout America is Fath's startling "Red Shoes." Fashioned of jewel-toned red satin it is tightly fitted to the knees where it flares in a circular flounce. With it is worn a huge, trailing stole of steel blue satin, lined with red, and held with mink cuffs high on either arm.

IN PARIS, as in New York, the slim, form-fitting line is preferred. However, most of the designers concern themselves with details that give width to the sheath silhouette. Master of this art is Dior, who, with the use of detachable panels, overskirts, etc., puts great fullness over a basic slim dress. For additional effect, he puts huge, patch pockets on the panels. This he does in both daytime and evening clothes.

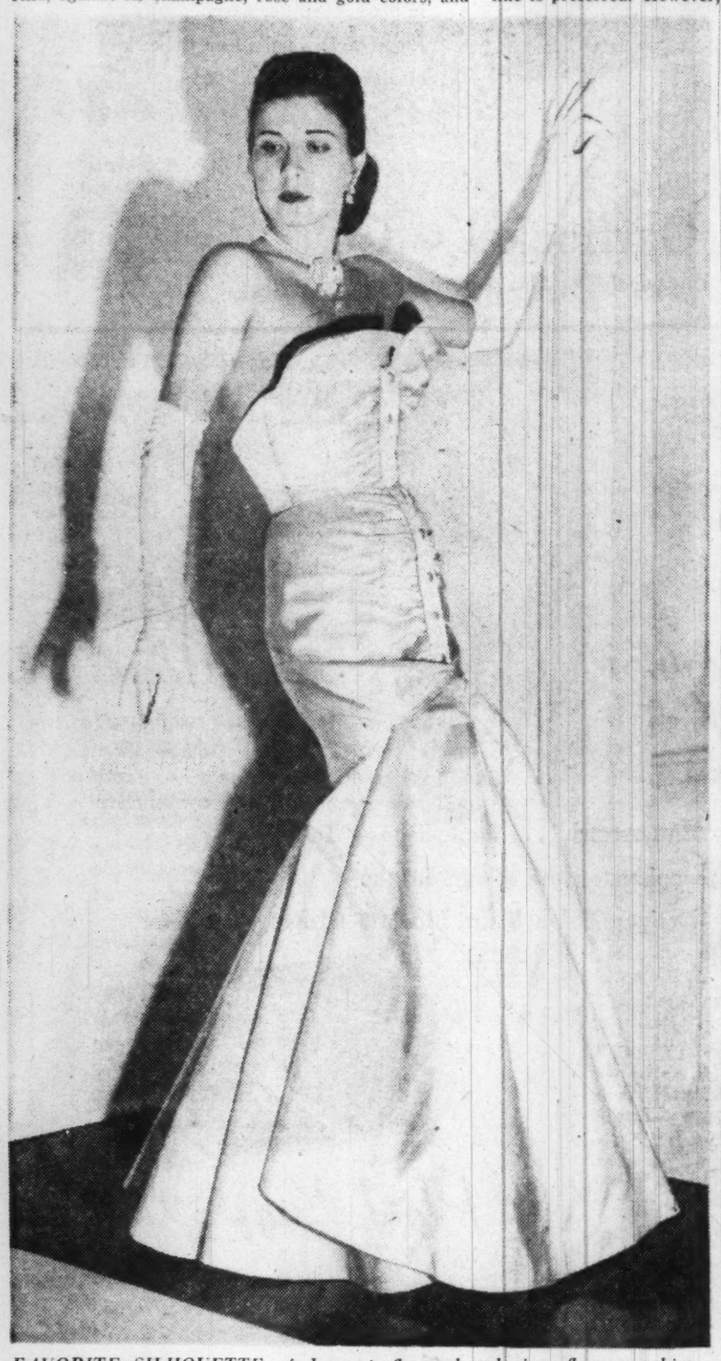
The two evening gowns by Schiaparelli are so different it is difficult to realize they come from the same designer. One, short, tailored and youthful-looking, is of gold brocade, belted in purple velvet. The other, of dark gray pleated silk organza, has a wide pouf hem that flares up to the knees in front, trails the floor in back.

ITEMS we especially liked:

Balmain's handsomely tailored oxford gray worsted suit . . . Balenciaga's ball gown, a whirl of pink silk net . . . Desses' copper-gold chiffon, with bodice of woven ribbons, and his checked wool sheath dress with flared tunic . . . and the shoes with mink soles!

Photos by Dimitri Wolkonsky

BALENCIAGA PRODUCED this regal ball gown which is one of 23 imports from the Paris fall collections brought to Washington this week by Julius Garfinckle & Co. Voluminous skirt is a pink silk net. Bodice, which extends in jutting points over the hipline, is of pink slipper satin, embroidered with silk cording, rhinestones and silver-shot metal



FAVORITE SILHOUETTE of Jacques Fath this season is found in this evening dress of white slipper satin. Fitted tightly to just above the knee, it flares sharply into flamenco skirt. Satin covered buttons run down the front of the gathered bodice to the flare of the skirt

CHRISTIAN DIOR'S "Meprise" in black winter wool is a characteristic piece from this designer's fall group. Detachable, three-quarter length panels are attached at the waistline which is accented with leather belt. Two huge patch pockets on panels give additional feeling of width

With Your Fall Suit Try Silk Shirtwaist

On my next shopping jaunt I'm going to buy myself a silk shirtwaist. Not too tailored, because I want it to look new. So I'm going to look for one with a softer shoulder or raglan sleeves—or perhaps one with a drop shoulder that has rather b i g g i s h shirtwaist sleeves.

Silk stripes are pretty, but I think I'd like a silk shirt in a color like amethyst or orange to go with my new gray pencil-striped suit.

Why don't you plan to choose a pretty silk shirt to go with your suit this fall?

Mary Haworth's Mail

Young Married Man, Studying on Veteran's Stipend, Limits His Social Activity to Family Visits and Seeing Movies; Wife's Mother Calls It Insufficient

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Two years ago our daughter Peg married a very fine young man. She was just out of college and Ed was continuing his education, which was interrupted by Army service. Ed is still in school, studying hard towards a profession, and Peg is working, so they have little time for entertaining.

However, the problem is that Ed refuses to have any kind of social life, aside from going to movies and visiting us and his family. He has an excellent education, is a member of two fraternities, and loves to play bridge with us and our friends, so he can't be shy.

What concerns me most is that he is getting very critical of Peg in small things, so much so that she is developing an inferiority complex and has become very subdued. I feel this is due to lack of outside interests and too close association with each other.

There is no in-law problem, as we are extremely fond of him and he seeks our company, and we are all very congenial and happy together.

When Ed and Peg were engaged they went around with a crowd of young people, enjoying the usual youthful pleasures. And I try to tell them that a few friends their own age, and a mild social gait, are necessary to a well rounded life; but it's wasted on Ed. He says he has nothing in common with any of the fellows and is too bored by them to spend an evening in their company. I feel stymied; and your discussion of the subject may benefit all of us. S. Y.

DEAR S. Y.: Despite your assertion to the contrary, I think there is an in-law problem here, a kind of contest between you and Ed, as to whether your strength or his is going to prevail in the domain of Peg's married life.

It seems to me that he is on the defensive about your mother-hen interest in Peg's wifely welfare, which you manifest in warm show of do-gooder concern for bother of them, but which he construes to mean (and accurately, I think) that you feel he isn't taking right care of her.

Maybe you don't know what's cooking in your unconscious, but as I get the picture, you are trying to take him over and manage him along the lines you think best for Peg, as you've always managed her—always with velvet gloved diplomacy, of course. Your ability to delude yourself, to believe what you wish to believe, is revealed in your claim that "We are all very happy and congenial together." But obviously that's not so, if Ed is acting the recluse to flout your views on the value of social play, and picking on Peg about little things; and if she is shrinking into a shell, losing her buoyancy in family exchange.

WHEN ED began to feel the double impact of your managerial drive and your partisan interest in Peg, which includes him on sufferance, naturally he got his back up, involuntarily. He couldn't help it. Any positively masculine man in his boots would feel the same. And what makes him so helpless to dissolve his unruly reaction is his own secret sense of failing Peg in lots of ways, I suppose—as compared to the life he'd like to give her.

So much for a subjective dip into the situation. Now, taking the objective view, you are certainly right in saying that a mild social pace with friends is good for the soul. Indeed the four elements essential to psychological health are work, worship, social play and love. And it is well known that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." But to recognize the idea doesn't mean that it may be embraced at will.

With Ed drudging belatedly on a veteran's stipend to attain a professional rating, and Peg wage-earning of necessity, no doubt, I don't see either the cash or energy in the cards, to invest in "gracious living" nowadays.

I can imagine that Ed, at least, is chronically tired and anxious about many things that only time, plugging and tight economy will solve. Thus to nag him for "holding his horses" socially seems to me absurdly inappropriate. Bring your busybody impulses under control, give both the most fun you can in your bailiwick, and I think everything will be all right. M. H.

A Function Without Function Is Defunct 'For the Duration'

By Elizabeth Maguire

A FUNCTION without a function is defunct today in military circles. Gatherings of the plush sort where dowagers out-do debutantes are out. Invitations are limited to occasions where a welcoming hand is given to newcomers, farewells are said, or monotony needs routing with a little informal music and dancing.

A variety of these activities today are taking good care of the social life of the armed forces. There are diplomatic do's, and dog shows, coffee parties, luncheons, club meetings, and countless wedding fetes.

To say farewell to Maj. Gen. C. C. J. Forslev, military and air attache from Denmark, and Mme. Forslev, a party was given yesterday by all the military and air attaches of U. N. embassies in Washington. The party was from 6:30 to 8:30 o'clock in the Carlton Room of the Carlton Hotel.

More than 150 members of many countries attended. In the receiving line with General and Mme. Forslev were Maj. Gen. Edgar do Amaral, military attache of Brazil and Mme. Amaral, Lieut. Col. Angel G. de Mendoza, military attache of Spain, and Senora de Mendoza, and Col. Angel Vaquero Davila, Ecuador's military attache, and Senora de Vaquero Davila.

The gathering was air-cooled, colorful, and alphabetically complete from Argentina to Venezuela. Foreign liaison officers of the United States who attended included Col. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel Biddle, Col. and Mrs. Robert L. Miller, Major Arthur E. LeVey, Major and Mrs. George M. Riser, Capt. and Mrs. Charles T. Katsainos, and others.

MEMBERS of the hostess committee of the Air Force Officers' Wives Club of Washington consume an increasing amount of doughnuts and coffee these days. Their duty is to see that all incoming Air Force Officers' wives in Washington are introduced to other wives at morning coffee parties.

Mrs. R. M. Cram entertained last week at a coffee party for Mrs. John M. Weikert, who has just returned with Gen. Weikert from a tour of duty in Japan; Mrs. Edward W. Anderson, who has just returned from England and is living at Bolling Field; Mrs. Ken K. Bonneaux, wife of Major Bonneaux, who has come to Washington from Austin, Texas, and Mrs. Robert Benford, wife of Colonel Benford, newly arrived from Fort Totten, New York.

The opening of the fall season for the Air Force Officers' Wives Club will be Wednesday, Sept 13, at a meeting and tea at the Army Navy Country Club. Mrs. Hoyt S. Vandenberg, wife of the Chief of Staff of the U. S. Air Force, will be guest of honor, and will be in the receiving line to greet members of the club and to meet Air Force wives who have recently come to Washington.

All Air Force wives are invited to attend and to become members of the organization. This includes wives of Air Force officers on active duty, or of officers on duty with the Air Force in the environs of Washington. Reservations are required and may be made up until noon, Monday, September 11, by telephoning Mrs. C. J. Martin, JO. 2-2867. Nursery facilities for children, ages 2 to 5, will be available by making arrangements through Mrs. S. D. Grubbs, JO. 2-9000.

THE NAVY Doctor's Wives Club at the Naval Medical Center Officers' Club will hold the first luncheon of the season Thursday, September 14, at 12:30 o'clock. Mrs. Ethel V. Taylor will be guest speaker.

MRS. TRUMAN has been invited as guest of honor to the benefit fashion show luncheon being held October 2 at 12:30 at the Fort McNair Club. The fashion show will be given by Garfinckel's and hostesses will be members of the Washington Chapter of the Daughters of the United States Army.

Mrs. Truman has graciously accepted the invitation, and Mrs. J. Lawton Collins, who is an Army Daughter, will certainly be there. Others invited to the benefit include Mrs. Frank Pace, Mrs. Omar Bradley, Mrs. Archibald Alexander, Mrs. Karl Bendetsen and Mrs. Earl Johnson.

Mrs. J. E. Ray, 4428 Greenwich Parkway, heads the ticket committee, assisted by Mrs. Nelson Walker, Woodley 7402, and Mrs. S. K. Yarbrough, Temple 0024.

WHILE their husbands study, wives of post-graduate students at Annapolis engage in a number of welfare and social activities. Information on bridge clubs, Red Cross work, Navy relief and so forth is channeled through the Post Graduate Women's Club of the Post Graduate School. First fall meeting of the club is to be held Tuesday, September 12, at 8 p. m. in the Post Graduate School auditorium.

A welcoming speech for newcomers will be made by Admiral E. E. Hermann, and Mrs. Hermann, honorary president of the club, will also say a few words. Mrs. C. S. Seabring will speak on Navy relief. Mrs. M. W. Hutchinson, jr., president of the Naval Academy Women's Club will speak on Gray Ladies and the Red Cross.

New officers of the club are Mrs. Richard M. Sewall, president; Mrs. Larry Moore, vice president; Mrs. A. S. Giorgis, recording secretary; Mrs. A. C. Swallow, treasurer; Mrs. Jack L. Becker, corresponding secretary; Mrs. T. A. Bush, counselor; Mrs. John W. Bowman, counselor; and Mrs. William C. Schultz, advisory counselor.

THE DOGGIEST 400 ever to put on a show are getting ready to meet November 5 at Specker Field House, Fort Belvoir. They are toy terrier, hound and working dogs, entries in the fall dog show of the Fort Belvoir Kennel Club (to be held indoors if damp and outdoors if fair). Membership in the Fort Belvoir Kennel Club is open to military and civilian personnel of the post as well as residents of the Washington area.

John G. Anderson of Washington, an authority on purebred dogs, has been named show superintendent. Members of the club named to grounds committee include Lieut. Col. T. DeF. Rogers, Maj. Paul L. Diediker, Capt. Rodney S. Dexter, and Sergt. First Class Wallace C. St. Clair, all of Fort Belvoir.

Tea for Nancy Kear Opens Debutante Season

By Marie McNair

FIRST debutante of the 1950-51 season, is Miss Nancy Graham Kear, who was presented to society yesterday at a tea given by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Frank Gregg Kear, at their home in Chevy Chase, Md. Following her tea, Miss Kear, her assistants and a matching number of young men, were entertained at a dinner Given by Dr. and Mrs. Kear at the Army-Navy Country Club.

Brown haired and blue eyed Miss Kear wore a gown of imported white Swiss taffeta splashed with blue and pink carnations, with a pouff at her back. She carried an old fashioned bouquet of shaded pink carnations and corn flowers. Mrs. Kear's gown was seafoam green chiffon with a matching stole caught with tiny pink rosebuds.

MISS NANCY KEAR

This season's debutantes who assisted were Miss Louise Cahill, Miss Bette-Baron Smith and Miss Joan Conger. Also assisting were Miss Mary Alice Fravel, a schoolmate, and Miss Virginia Black of New York.

Pale pink carnations in formal bouquets and masses of summer flowers sent the debutante, adorned the drawing room suite. Guests were serenaded by Jack Morton's strolling troupadour.

Miss Kear was graduated from National Cathedral School and finished at St. Lawrence University at Canton, N. J., last month. She is a member of Alpha Delta Pi sorority. This fall she proposes to begin a radio career.

Here for the party and a guest of the Kear household was John Henry Glass of Rockville Center, N. Y.

MISS DULCIE-ANN STEINHARDT, daughter of Mrs. Laurence A. Steinhardt and the late United States Ambassador to Canada, has selected October 7 as the date of her wedding to Flight Lieut. Allan A. Sherlock, Royal Canadian Air Force, Aide-de-Camp to the Governor General of Canada, Viscount Alexander of Tunis. He's the son of Mrs. George Sherlock of Toronto and holds the Distinguished Flying Cross and Bar.

The ceremony will held in Ottawa in All Saints Church with Flight Lieut. E. W. S. Gilbert of Air Force Headquarters, Ottawa, officiating. Judge Irwin Untermyer of New York will give his cousin in marriage and a reception will follow at the Rockcliffe Air Station Officers Mess.

The bride-to-be will have her cousin, Mrs. Albert J. Erdmann, jr., of New York as her matron of honor. Other attendants are the Hon. Rose Alexander, Miss Helen Claxton, Miss Elizabeth Abbott, Miss Madeleine Steen, Miss Pauline Pillet and Miss Anne Bethune.

Flight Lieut., Eric Sherlock, DFC, will be best man for his twin brother. Ushers include Wing Commander D. J. Jackson, Squadron Leader D. MacWilliams, Flight Lieut. James John, Flight Lieut. Eric Smith, Flight Lieut. H. Keane, Lieut. Richard Rosenblatt, USAAF, cousin of Miss Steinhardt.

MRS. CHARLES ULRICK BAY, wife of the United States Ambassador to Norway, will swing the champagne bottle to christen the S. S. Constitution at Quincy, Mass., September 16. She and the Ambassador, now in Oslo, will arrive in New York next week.

Mrs. Bay shares with her husband a love of the sea. The Ambassador, something of an "old salt," pilots his yacht the "Norsage" through Norwegian waters and is usually hesitant about turning over the helm to even the most experienced sailor. He has been known on many occasions, however, to relinquish the responsibility of this post to his wife.

The Constitution which Mrs. Bay will send down the ways is the first transatlantic liner to be named in honor of Old Ironsides. Her maiden voyage is scheduled for April 24.

Vanity Pattern 6105

PARIS, always strong for the ensemble idea, this season points up the dress plus jacket. Emphasis is on the soft fluid lines rather than tailored sharpness. To achieve this Paris-born smartness it is important to choose the right material. Lightweight wools with a soft "handle"—woven so that they drape easily and gracefully—lend themselves to interpreting these style lines. Jersey is notably a first—gabardines of the soft and less bulky type, and any of the lovely new sheer wools.

Vanity Pattern 6105 calls for a lightweight type of woolen that can be combined effectively with a tie silk, a rayon, or a fine fall cotton print in the new dusky rich colors. This contrasting fabric can be used for the blouse and for the cuffs, collar and belt of the lumberjacket. Remember both blouse and jacket can also be worn with a separate skirt as well as the jumper so coordinate colors carefully if you want to make the most of your wardrobe.

Vanity Pattern 6105 comes in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18, 20. Size 16 requires 4½ yards of 54-inch material for the jumper and jacket and 3⅛ yards of 39-inch for the blouse and contrast on the jacket.

Send 50c (in coins) for Vanity Pattern 6105 to The Washington Post, Pattern Dept., P. O. Box 88, Old Chelsea Station, New York 11, N. Y. Please print plainly your NAME, ADDRESS with ZONE, SIZE and STYLE NUMBER.

New College Coiffure Is Short and Shining

Eighth day of Margaret's beauty program

By Ann Lawrence

YOUTHFUL, smooth hairdo accents Margaret's piquant face

WHEN fad and fashion meet, it's a happy day for the college girl. For the smartest gals about the campus know a fashion when they meet one . . . and they make their own fads.

Fad and fashion are combined in today's short hair styles. And the shoulder-length, free-swinging bob is a passe for the college girl this season as it is for her older sister.

This year's college girl strives for a neat, crisp, albeit feminine look, from the top of her shining crown to the tips of her square-toed moccasins. And a well-styled, brushed-daily coiffure is one of the easiest ways to pass the good looks test.

When we first met Margaret, the beauty of her auburn hair was almost hidden in the mass of locks which tumbled, helter-skelter, to her shoulders. Her small, piquant features were overshadowed by this super-abundance. As you see in the picture at the right, it was a case of "Hair, where's Margaret?"

The first thing she said to Mr. Raymond, the hair stylist whom we visited, was, "Not too short, please" . . . with a plaintive note in her voice.

As Raymond studied her hair . . . its texture, the condition of her scalp, its relation to her face and features . . . a compromise hair-cut was decided upon. There would be no shingle effect, but the hair would be controlled, brushed and waved into a simple, light-hearted coiffure that would depend upon the coloring and fine, healthy texture of the hair itself for its beauty.

THE FIRST STEP was a razor-cut. Cutting with a razor, Raymond believes, keeps the ends soft, keeps them from a stubby, whisk-broom texture. Approximately 2 inches was cut from the length; the ends were evened; the hair was slightly thinned, so that distribution was more even . . . all with the razor.

The next step was a change of part. Although Margaret had always worn her hair parted on the left (and wondered why several stubborn strands always poked through the top layer), Raymond gave her a slanting part, avoiding the cowlicks at the top of her crown which had disturbed the smooth surface.

Two rows of pin curls, around the back, each turned toward the face, and two rows of curls to form the soft bang (one on top of each other, directly over her forehead) took care of the setting job.

THE FINAL RESULT you see in the picture at the left. It is a youthful, yet suave hair-styling, so easy to comb that Margaret can't be late for an 8 o'clock!

The crown is left completely smooth. The ends turn under across the back in a smooth roll turn up about half an inch above her ears in front to soften her features.

By keeping the upper part of the coiffure simple and concentrating interest at the jaw and chinline, her face becomes more oval in shape. It's a matter of compensation. Hair width where feature width isn't.

The two layers of curls at her forehead are separated in the combing-out process. The top layer is brushed across the forehead, up and back, ending in a part upswing. The second, lower layer curves gently down and under.

Thrift Shop to Open For Fall Season

MONDAY at 10 a. m. the Thrift Shop, 809 Ninth st., nw. will begin its 22d year of raising money through the sale of discarded articles to help support six children's charities in the District.

Closed during August, the shop's two floors are now restocked for the mothers who wish to purchase back-to-school clothes for their youngsters. A large force of volunteer saleswomen, including many members of the Thrift Shop's Board, will be on hand to help shoppers make selections.

Sales at the shop have been so successful that last year more than $20,000 was turned over to member organizations for purchase of equipment and supplies, and maintainance of needed services for Washington's sick and needy children.

Many of the articles for sale are donated by members of the boards of the six participating organizations, but many others are given by interested citizens who supply articles no longer needed.

Because the shop is staffed largely by volunteers every cent of profit goes to provide such things as cribs for hospital wards, summer camp for orphaned youngsters and convalescent and psychiatric care. The six participating organizations who direct the project are: The Child Welfare Society, Columbia Hospital's Prenatal Clinic, The Children's Country Home, Children's Hospital, St. John's Orphanage and the Junior League, whose current project is the support of the Psychiatric Clinic at Children's Hospital.

Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner is chairman of the Thrift Shop's board of directors. Serving with her as officers are: Mrs. William North Sturtevant, vice chairman; Mr. L. B. Pendleton, jr., treasurer; Mrs. Samual Spencer, recording secretary; Mrs. Frederick Solger, corresponding secretary; Mrs. R. Gilpin Ervin, finance chairman; and Mrs. George W. Petticord, finance vice chairman.

Like Kosher Dill Pickles? Here's a Recipe That Is A Pickle-Dilly—Tried It?

DEAR ANNE:

Here is a recipe for kosher dill pickles which the reader, who recently asked for one, might use:

KOSHER DILL PICKLES

20-25 dill-sized cucumbers; ½ teaspoon powdered alum; 1 clove garlic; 2 heads of dill; 1 hot red pepper; 1 quart vinegar; 1 cup salt; 3 quarts water; grape leaves, washed.

Wash and stem cucumbers. Let stand in cold water overnight. Place in hot sterilized jars. To each quart, add alum, garlic, dill, and pepper in quantities listed. Combine vinegar, salt, and water. Stir until salt is dissolved. Bring to boil. Fill jars. Place grape leaf in each jar. Half seal. Do not completely seal until settled, weeks later.

Mrs. Norma Nichols, Winchester, Va.

Dear Anne:

Is there any way to take out the tiny holes caused by stitching in a silk parachute?

E.M.N., Washington.

If the threads aren't broken, you should be able to work out the holes by dampening the material, then stretching and pulling it gently from side to side. In this way, the threads can be restored to their original position in the weave, then pressed dry with warm iron.

Anne answers questions through her column only. Address letters to "Anne," Room 408, The Washington Post, Washington 4, D. C. Names and addresses of questioners will be used, unless specifically requested otherwise.

National Home Week Begins

Here's a sample of what is open to public inspection as part of the National Home Week observance in Greater Washington. Located at 811 Buckingham dr., Silver Spring, this one-story brick house is priced at $16,950. Builder is Harold B. Jones. House has three bedrooms,

Another of the National Home Week houses, this modern, two-bedroom rambler awaits your inspection in Fairlee subdivision, Fairfax County, Va. To reach, drive out U. S. Route 29-211 two miles past Merrifield, turn right at sign. Sale price is $12,850. Builder is Talmage Wilcher, Inc.

Although Geneva Tomlin is undeniably winsome, the National Association of Home Builders hopes her dress will give you pause, too. Artist Charles Latshaw has painted thereon the evolution of the log cabin to today's ranch rambler. Miss Tomlin is, aptly enough, "Miss National Home Week"

Area Builders Put 24 Houses on Display

SO far this year, Greater Washington home builders have constructed more new houses and apartments than were erected in all of 1949.

Over the Nation, about five million new houses and apartments have been built since the end of World War II. Right now, an estimated 500,000 new units are under construction throughout the country.

That's to give you an idea why National Home Week, which starts today, promises to meet with an enthusiastic response. Interest in new homes is at an all-time high.

In this area, the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington has sponsored "open house" at projects of 24 builders. You're

Buyers Rush as Building Slows

Nation Takes a Look At 15,000 New Homes

By David G. Bareuther

Associated Press Real Estate Editor

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—The biggest home show in history is now on in virtually every town in the United States.

It is the beginning of National Home Week.

A total of close to 15,000 new sample houses are expected to be open for inspection this weekend in 1500 communities. This is the estimate of E. G. Gavin, editor of the American Builder, trade publication of the home construction industry.

Gavin originated National Home Week in 1948 when 1500 houses were displayed. Last year the number grew to 10,000.

The National Association of Home Builders says more than 100 daily newspapers are planning special home sections during National Home Week. Prizes for the best real estate page and the best real estate newsfeature will be awarded at the annual convention in Chicago in January, 1951.

The reason this is a big event this year is that home buyers have more to choose from. Builders have set an all-time production record.

The NAHB reports that the volume of construction is more than 50 percent above last year. Surveys by the Government's Bureau of Labor Statistics indicate that close to one million new dwellings have been provided in the first eight months of this year and that last year's record will be passed by the time the last quarter begins.

This may be the biggest home week for some time to come. Builders now are cutting back production in compliance with President Truman's request for a slowdown to release materials for national defense.

Although the backlog of demand for homes created by the last war has not yet been satisfied, mortgage credit is being tightened, various building materials are becoming scarce, and costs are rising

Even to Going Nature One Better

Its Planning Makes a Project

By Robert P. Jordan

WHENEVER a merchant builder produces an outstanding home development, it's certain that plenty of planning went into it.

A prime example is Robert C. Davenport's Hollin Hills subdivision a short distance below Alexandria in the Potomac hills off Fort Hunt Rd. The year-old project has been the subject of several articles in national magazines.

DAVENPORT

But Davenport isn't satisfied, and that's what makes this story.

In his low-cost houses ($11,000 excluding lots) he had a prizewinning design by Architect Charles M. Goodman. In fitting those houses, and others of different design, to their lots, he had avoided a "peas in a pod" development.

Improving on Nature

NOW he's gone a step further. He's engaged Landscape Architect Lou Bernard Voigt to figure out the best way to enhance the natural beauty of the project's woodland setting.

What Voigt has done is to study the topography of each lot and come up with an individual landscaping plan. When a home buyer signs a contract these days, he finds that this plan is an important part of his purchase.

At the project's outset, it was optional with buyers whether their homes were landscaped. "So half the families had their homes landscaped, and half didn't." The result, Davenport says, wasn't all that it could be.

He points out that most of Hollin Hills' residents have been long time apartment dwellers. "They didn't have any idea what to do about landscaping," he asserts.

The new system changes that. "We take the plan," the builder says, "and sit down with the customer. We ask him, "How much of this do you want us to do?" Whatever landscaping the customer can afford is carried out.

Landscaping is an expensive proposition, Davenport declares. Architects figure it should come to about 10 percent of the cost of the home. Many purchasers, obviously, are unable to take on this expense at the start.

Armed with the landscaping plan, the purchaser can set up a long-range program—one that he can do himself. As each project comes along, he can take the plan to nurseries and get cost estimates.

It's Fun, Too

THIS gets to be "semi-recreational" after a time, according to Davenport. The end result is added beauty and—more practically—more privacy and better drainage.

Hollin Hills nestles in the valleys, along the sides of ridges and on the crown of the rolling Virginia terrain. Houses—both one-story and split-level in design—are placed "with the sun and the view." Lots cost from $1800 to $3200 and range from 15,000 to 25,000 square feet in size. The average is about one-third acre.

Davenport's houses in seven different models cost from $11,000 up to $20,000. Extensive use of glass is a feature of their modern styling.

The homes are "pre-sold," which means that they're bought before they're built. The result is that no speculative building is done. A minimum of 10 percent down is required, with 20 percent preferred. Thus, home buyers have a considerable equity in their houses at the time they move in.

Davenport plans to construct a total of 360 homes. By the end of September, he says, 46 houses will be occupied. Sometime in October, an additional 25 houses will be completed.

As of now, he reports, he has enough houses sold to keep him in production for the next six months.

Here is the low-cost Hollins Hills home—planned right down to the last shrub on the lawn

Area Building Awards Show Big Increase

CONSTRUCTION contract awards in Washington in July totaled $38,767,000.

The amount is 80 percent more than the June figure of $21,484,000, and 96 percent more than the total for July 1949, it was reported yesterday by E. H. Keefe, branch manager of F. W. Dodge Corp., construction news and marketing specialists.

This brought the area's total for seven months of 1950 to $205,226,000—39 percent above the corresponding total for the first seven months of 1949.

Residential contracts at $30,206,000 were 81 percent above the June figure and 128 percent ahead of July 1949 to bring the first seven months of 1950 ahead of the same period of 1949 by 87 percent.

Non-residential construction awards for July increased from the June figure by 46 percent, and public and private works and utilities total increased over June by 207 percent, Keefe announced.

15 Million 'Old' Dwellings Spruced Un in Past Decade

THE RECORD-BREAKING volume of new housing construction in the last two years has been accompanied by an unprecedented amount of home modernization and repair, according to H. R. Northrup, executive vice president of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association.

"As a result, there has been an unprecedented improvement in the national housing supply during the period," Northrup said.

"Although there are no official statistics available to measure the extent of home improvement, reports from retail lumber and building materials dealers and studies of the utilization of the materials and equipment produced indicate that expenditures for modernizing and repairing homes have been running at a rate as high as seven billion dollars a year for the last two years.

"It is entirely probable that, in addition to the construction of five million brand new homes since the end of World War II, another 15 million existing homes have undergone substantial improvements in the form of new roofs, bathrooms, heating plants and kitchen installation of insulation and weatherstripping; replacement of floors and flooring materials; construction of garages; repainting; finishing of attic and basement rooms, and the like.

"A recent analysis of the FHA's Title I home improvement loans shows that the amount of the average insured loan was in excess of $400 and that half of all loans insured are for roofing, heating and insulation work."

Painting Pointers

In painting acoustical material used on ceilings or walls, be sure to follow the manufacturer's recommendations, or the sound-absorption qualities will be destroyed. Such materials usually should be covered with only a thin coating of a recommended surfacer.

Shelf Convenience

A double-hinged door which can open fully and fold back for kitchen corner cabinets makes that shelf space more convenient. The usual upright post can be elminated. Structural support is provided by horizontal braces under the shelves and the counter top.

July Building Boom Reduces Washington's Lag From 1949

DISTRICT construction contract awards in July totaled $10,811,000—an amount 163 percent higher than the June figure of $4,106,000 and 88 percent greater than July, 1949, according to the F. W. Dodge Corp.

This brought Washington's total for the first seven months of 1950 to $61,233,000, or 2 percent below the corresponding total for last year, the Dodge firm said.

Residential contracts of $6,381,000 were 229 percent ahead of June and 117 percent ahead of July 1949 to bring the seven-month total for 1950 ahead of the same period last year by 162 percent.

Non-residential awards for July increased over the June total by 66 percent. The seven-month non-residential figure for 1950 was 54 percent lower than a year ago.

Public and private works and utilities showed a 201 percent increase in July, but a decrease of 26 percent from the first seven months of 1949.

Big Increase In Contract Awards Noted

NEW YORK—Engineering construction contract awards reported in the week ended Monday climbed to $342,486,000, according to Engineering News-Record.

This was 50 percent above the 1950 weekly average to date and compared with $198,771,000 in the preceding week and $155,191,000 in the corresponding week last year.

Private contract awards accounted for $222,705,000 of the total and public contract awards amounted to $119,781,000.

Large contract awards included one for 40 million dollars for the Choctaw Paper Mill at Butler, Ala., and a $39,750,000 contract for natural gas feeder lines in New Mexico and Arizona.

The cumulative total of heavy construction contract awards for the 35 weeks of 1950 to date reached $8,004,886,000—up 46 percent from the corresponding total last year.

Present New Home Trend Is Toward Pushbutton Living

PROSPECTIVE buyers who visit demonstration homes here during "National Home Week" will see not just shelters, but rather "machines for homemaking" which contain much of the comfort-giving and labor-saving equipment that once had to be purchased separately with an extra drain on the budget.

Present-day practice of providing most mechanical "extras" with a house is making today's homes the best bargains ever offered in the opinion of most builders.

Not only does a purchaser get a complete house with better equipment than he normally could afford, but he also has the advantage of paying for the accessories as he pays for his home, builders explain.

Included in today's home package are items not even considered a few years ago. The 1950 homes have such equipment as gas or electric refrigerators, washing machines, automatically controlled heating systems, kitchen ranges, dishwashers, garbage disposal units, ventilating fans, venetian blinds, bathroom sun lamps and other items for comfort and efficiency.

Virtually all of this year's new homes have automatic heating controls, typifying the trend toward pushbutton living. Last year more than 67 per cent of all home furnaces sold were automatically fired, according to an industry study. A survey of two million homes revealed 87 per cent had installed automatic heating plants.

This trend has been growing in certain rural areas where the swing toward complete farm electrification has resulted in more than 100,000 families installing thermostatic temperature controls in the last two years.

Insulating glass units with a total thickness of one inch insulates against heat loss almost as well as a 12-inch concrete wall.

Alkali, Too

Moisture's The Bane of Asphalt Tile

IN PLACING asphalt tile flooring over concrete, the best results are obtained if consideration is given to a number of factors that can cause difficulties. These are:

Moisture penetration from subsoil; penetration of moisture remaining in the slab at the time of installation of the tile; waxing of the tile soon after installation; excessive alkali in the subsoil; the use of mastic other than that recommended by the manufacturer; dust, dirt, oil or paint remaining on the slab.

The concrete in the slab should have a low water-cement ratio and should be given a drying time of at least 30 days, except in areas where an extremely dry climate exists.

The tile should be installed in accordance with the manufacturer's recommendations and the floor should not be waxed for at least 30 days.

Heavy waxing seals the pores of the tile as well as the joints, and moisture evaporating towards the warm side of the tile creates a pressure which will cause loosening, discoloration and sometimes partial disintegration.

Building Congress To Hear Donohue

F. Joseph "Jiggs" Donohue, special assistant to the United States Attorney General, will speak at a luncheon meeting of the Washington Building Congress at 12:30 p. m. Monday at the Mayflower Hotel. His topic will be, "Are the Commies Out-Shooting Us?"

The Lighter Touch

Cover your wastepaper baskets with wallpaper matching the walls and you'll have a brighter room. Another suggestion for a gay touch is to paper the cover of your telephone directory.

Product Previews

THE HASSOCK that Fido has taken over is made for rough usage. It's covered with tough, Vinylite resin-coated cloth that resists the wear and tear of paws, shoes and surplus television fans. Most stains and dirt wash off easily with a damp cloth. Bishop Products Co., 7512 Carnegie ave., Cleveland 3, Ohio, can tell you all about it.

IF THERE'S RAIN in the sky and you want to keep dry, raise the world over your head and walk on.

That's one of the new products for today—a transparent vinylite plastic umbrella imprinted with a map of the world. It is made by the Eichenbaum Umbrella Co. of New York. They claim it is education, too. You can locate all the trouble-spots in the world on a rainy day.

GENERAL ELECTRIC is throwing some light on foot sizes. From its lamp division in Cleveland came the announcement that A. Maurice Smith of Maurice L. Rothschild & Co., Chicago, has invented a device using electric lights to measure foot sizes.

The lights are the flashlight bulb type—21 of them—one for each foot size on a panel 4 by 6 inches. When you put your feet in it, your shoe-size is flashed.

THE REK-O-NUT CO., INC., of Long Island City, N. Y., comes forward with a phonograph turntable that is ready for anything—or almost everything—that the record makers can think of in the way of speeds.

It is making a variable speed turntable of broadcast quality with 80 speeds. Push a single lever and you get any one of the speeds from 20 rpm to 100.

BOSWICK LABORATORIES, INC. of Bridgeport, Conn., has a new cleaner to spray our spots away. The company says the dry cleaners for home use are sprayed on from a push-button spray can, and won't leave rings.

Fixing Cracks In Plaster Is Simple Task

REPAIR of plaster cracks does not require refinishing of the whole surface and can be done by an unskilled workman. The crack must be wide enough to allow sufficient fresh plaster to be forced in to it to form a good bond with the old plaster.

If necessary, scrape out the area to make an opening at least one-quarter inch across, then brush out all particles of loose sand and plaster and thoroughly dampen the surface before applying fresh plaster.

The plaster should then be pressed well into the crack and struck off flush with the surface. To avoid any drying-out which would cause a chalky condition without sufficient strength, spray water onto the surface after the plaster has set and keep the surface damp for 24 hours.

MILLS BUILDING WILLIAM M. CANBY REALTOR RE. 3732

Playroom Gives Mom Big Break on Rainy Days

ONE OF mother's big headaches—how to keep her tots happy on rainy days—is getting a cure.

Many families have found that a basement or spare room play area can be easily developed along with the general recreation room for the whole family. If the room is planned properly, youngsters won't have to "wait another day to play."

Here are some tips from the Tile Council of America to help you create a combination recreation room and indoor playground.

1. Draw a plan of the spare room or basement. Figure how the greatest space can be obtained by partitioning off heating and laundry units, remembering that children enjoy maximum room for play.

2. If the basement is used, the stairway should be equipped with a handrail, especially for safety of children scampering up and down.

3. The floor should be dry and rugged.

4. Folding chairs and tables can be stored easily when the floor is needed for dancing for adults or tricycle riding for youngsters.

5. A small table and chairs offer youngsters facility for quiet games, drawing and possible snacks. Children's table, properly decorated, offers extra coffee table for grownup's party.

6. Swing and gym equipment—trapeze and rings—can be hung from the ceiling. But be sure to put mat under these in case of falls.

7. For convenience of both adults and children, the basement can be partitioned so that a small bathroom is provided.

8. Children's toys can be stored in a built-in chest, which serves as additional seat for adults when covered by mats.

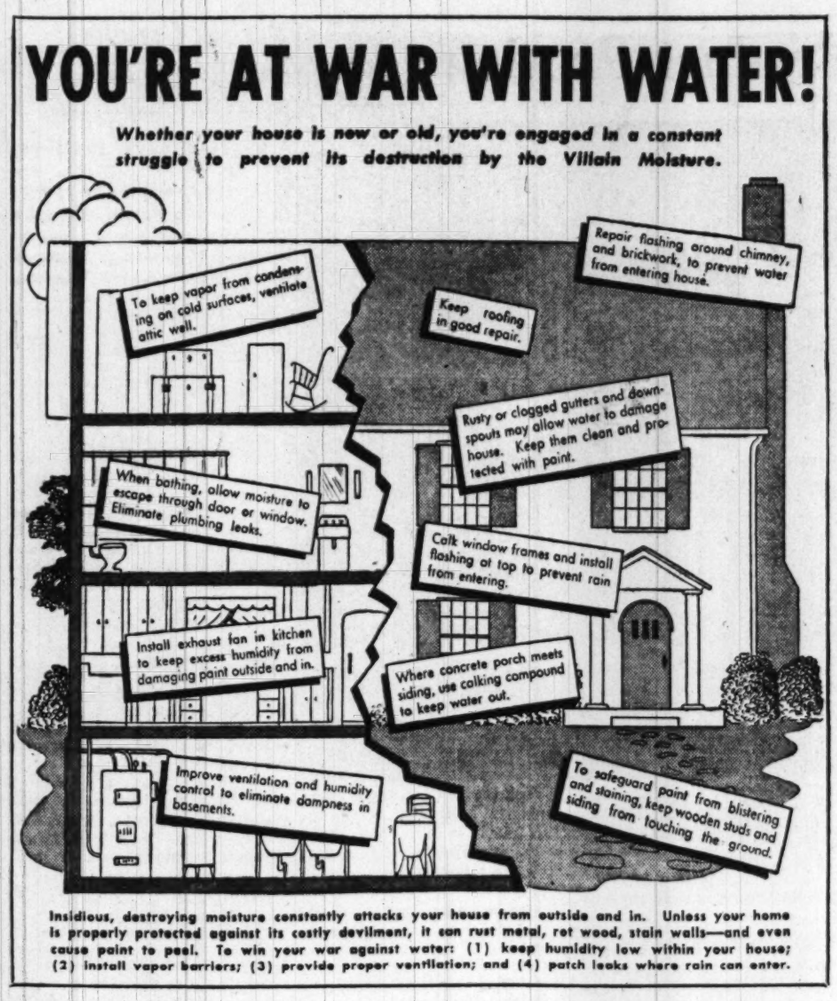
New Building Material Tested

A new building material, closely related to plywood, is being tested on several low-cost houses in Seattle, Wash. The material's surface layer is made of a 5-16-inch Douglas fir exterior type plywood base, to which is added 1-16-inch of fine wood fibers bonded to one surface.

Factory-cut into drop-siding sizes, the material is said to cost less than any other type of quality drop siding.

Coating for Shingles

If wooden shingles have once been painted, they cannot then be stained. Refinishing must be done with paint. Stained shingles, however, can be refinished with paint if the stain has weathered away.



National Home Week Opens

WEEK, rom Page 1R

to a point that may compel many families to postpone home buying.

Demand Increases

In this situation, a buying rush has developed. In the normally slack midsummer season, more buyers made down payments on houses than ever before.

Throughout the Nation, World War II veterans have been buying homes at a rate of approximately 50,000 per month. Some 1,900,000 veterans have purchased homes under the GI bill. It is estimated that 12,464,232 veterans still have until 1957 to buy homes under that law.

The slowdown in building now beginning inevitably will add to that backlog. Few new projects are now being launched.

The Home Builders Association of Greater Cleveland reports home building in that area has dropped off about 25 percent since the start of the Korean war, while costs have advanced about five percent.

A survey of 17,000 NAHB members in 140 cities shows that credit curbs soon will result in a general cutback of 25 to 30 percent in new homes started.

The new credit curbs call for a minimum of five percent cash as down payment by veterans, and an increase of five percent in all cash payments on FHA-insured mortgage loans.

But uncertainties over building costs seem to be a greater factor in checking the boom than credit restrictions. Builders are hesitant to take orders for houses to be finished three or four months from now, when they do not know what the ultimate cost will be. The builder of Levittown, N. Y., is taking orders for 1951 delivery with the price left open.

Mid-Century House

The typical house of 1950 being exhibited for National Home Week represents the best the home builders have been able to offer after a five-year period of postwar experience and competition. It is distinguished by an entirely new type of architecture, blending features of the California ranch house, the traditional colonial cottage and modern ideas such as the window-walled solar house.

Completely electrical kitchens, built-in television sets—some on turntables for viewing from several rooms—year-around airconditioning, radiant heat, automatic temperature control, floor-to-ceiling windows of insulating glass are among some of the features you may find.

Miami Costs Below Other U. S. Leaders

MIAMI, Fla.—Residential construction costs are lower per unit in Metropolitan Miami than in other sections of the country leading in building activity.

A report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics places the Miami area seventh in a list of the 15 most active areas in construction during the first five months of 1950.

Unit cost of construction was placed at $6900. Los Angeles was next with $7100. Cleveland was highest at $10,800.

In construction activity, Miami topped Boston, Cleveland, Dallas, San Francisco-Oakland, Seattle, Denver and Pittsburgh. It trailed New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit and Washington, D. C.

In the first seven months of the year, home building in Miami broke all previous records of the area for a comparative period, the bureau reported.

A total of 13,060 privately-financed houses and apartments was started in the period, a gain of 43 percent over 1949 and 36 percent over 1948, the previous peak.

Old Plumbing Fixtures Cause Water Waste

FROM surveys conducted during the water shortage around New York City, officials found that obsolete plumbing fixtures were wasting 200 million gallons of water a day in the city alone.

Nearly all these old plumbing fixtures should be replaced, according to the Plumbing and Heating Industries Bureau. Most of the fixtures and faucets are so antiquated as to make simple repairs impractical and a waste of time.

An old plumbing fixture in poor repair, the Bureau says, wastes far more water than the homeowner realizes. A slow drip at a leaking faucet, for example, can use up as much as 450 gallons a month.

This waste of water not only means a higher water bill but also means that valuable fuel is being wasted in heating the hot water used at kitchen sinks, bathtubs, lavatories, and laundry tubs.

Many builders of low-cost homes have found that houses with full walls of insulating glass can be built more cheaply than those of conventional wall construction.

Five-Day Housing Conference Set for Houston in October

HOUSTON, Tex., Sept. 9.—The largest housing conference ever held in the Southwest will get under way October 15, with 500 builders, Federal housing officials and industry leaders in attendance.

It is the five-day fall meeting of the National Association of Home Builders' board of directors. The Houston Home Builders Association will serve as hosts.

"This will be one of the most important housing conferences ever held," reported Frank W. Cortright, NAHB's executive vice president. "It comes at a time of great national uncertainty on matters related to housing," he declared.

"We have already been advised that the Government wants us to maintain a high volume of employment and production, within the limits imposed by the war program. We are prepared to do that.

"Builders have been advised by the NAHB to go ahead with next year's housing plans, proceeding in a cautious fashion, recognizing that many unforeseen difficulties may lie ahead."

Subjects up for discussion include: Effect on home sales of recent Government curbs on mortgage credit, availability of construction credit, slum clearance by private enterprise, NAHB's national architectural competition, housing legislation, architectural services for large subdivisions of low-cost homes and housing production volume during 1951.

Attending the meeting will be Government's three top housing officials, headed by Raymond M. Foley, administrator, Housing and Home Finance Agency. Others are Franklin D. Richards, commissioner, Federal Housing Administration, and T. B. King, chief, Loan Guarantee Section, Veterans Administration.

Historic Virginia Plantation

A Self-Supporting Estate of 1160 Acres
Midway between Warrenton and Charlottesville, with the Blue Ridge Mountains as a backdrop, lies "Mount Sharon", one of the finest estates in all Virginia. Its 1160 rolling, fertile acres and its distinguished Georgian mansion represent a way of life which has changed but little since Colonial times.
Mount Sharon's lands are in top condition, supporting 400 head of beef cattle, about 150 sheep and a fine stable of race horses. The estate is much more than self-supporting, with a net annual income of about $9,000.
The handsome 15-room brick residence, built in 1937, combines Colonial grace and simplicity with the more practical demands of modern comforts. There are 7 master bedrooms, 6 baths and many meticulously executed interior details.
The racing stable, with enclosed exercise track and 20 box stalls, can also be used as a show barn for cattle. Other farm and estate buildings include four barns, a 6-room manager's house and four tenant houses. For price and complete details ask for illustrated brochure #43151.

VA Explains How Some Vets Can Have Guaranty Restored

THE VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION yesterday outlined conditions under which World War II veterans who have used their loan guaranty rights under the GI bill may have their entitlement to VA-guaranteed loans for homes, farms and businesses restored under certain special circumstances.

The Housing Act of 1950 authorized VA to restore the amount of loan guaranty entitlement used by a veteran to purchase property which subsequently is taken over for public use, destroyed by fire or other natural hazard, or is "disposed of because of other compelling reasons devoid of fault on the part of the veteran."

A further condition is that VA must have been relieved of liability in connection with the Government guarantee on the loan, with no claim having been made against it.

In defining "other compelling reasons," VA said it first must be shown that failure to restore the used entitlement would result in a "substantial hardship" to the veteran. It gave these examples of conditions under which restoration may be made:

1. Reasons of health, such as where a home is disposed of because the type of dwelling or climate of the locality is injurious to the veteran or a member of his family, as evidenced by a doctor's certificate;

2. Loss of employment which necessitates removal to another city, or transfer by an employer. Loss of temporary employment, or regular rotation as in the case of military personnel transferred periodically, does not qualify.

3. Other reasons which VA finds in individual cases to be "compelling."

VA emphasized that entitlement cannot be restored where the veteran's mortgage indebtedness is assumed by a third party, with VA remaining liable on the loan guarantee. Also, restoration will be made only once for any veteran, except in very unusual circumstances.

Prior to the Housing Act of 1950, an eligible veteran was entitled to a VA guarantee of 50 percent of a real estate loan, up to a maximum of $4000. For veterans who have used none of their loan guaranty entitlement, the act raised the guarantee to 60 percent of the loan, and a maximum of $7500.

VA said that where a veteran had used none of his loan guaranty entitlement other than that which is restored under the new provision, he will be eligible for the higher guarantee.

Application for restoration of used entitlement should be made to the loan guaranty officer of the VA regional office which issued the guarantee on the loan.

Couple Furnishes Apartment for $500

By Harriet Morrison

IN A YEAR'S time Barbara and Alan Puckett have succeeded in giving their one-room apartment in a New York City brownstone (left and below) an air of distinction for under $500.

Barbara is a quiet, black-haired girl who likes books. Her husband, Alan Puckett, is a designer with a respect for color, line and form and a flair for seeing possibilities in Third Avenue second-hand furniture stores.

When they were married a year ago they knew they wanted a small, distinguished apartment where they could display water colors and etchings by Alan and his friends, as well as period prints they both enjoy. But they had very little money.

When they found the long, high-ceilinged, one-room apartment with a fireplace, they went to work. By painting and refinishing second-hand furniture themselves, shopping carefully for accessories and following their own good color sense, they have created what they wanted.

And they have thoroughly enjoyed doing it.

Their color scheme is olive green and white with accents of mauve pink, lime green and black. Alan mixed the olive green color for the walls by adding a quart of clear green and a half pint each of red and yellow to a gallon of white.

He did the painting himself. Barbara made the striped denim slipcovers.

Alan built ceiling-high bookcases and storage shelves next to the fireplace, painting these to match walls. The tall china cabinet from a second-hand store was painted to match the partition separating the living area and kitchen.

Their most expensive piece of furniture is a $28 small cocktail table of Venetian origin found in an antique shop. The $8 second-hand desk was painted black and an armchair white.

But don't think for a minute they are done. They keep running into "finds" that will blend with what they have.

In Home Refrigerators

Refrigerated Drawers Make It Easier to Find Food

REFRIGERATED drawers are creeping into designs of home-type refrigerators. The big advantage is the ease of finding something in the maze of foods stored there.

To reach a jar stored at the back of a refrigerator shelf, as comedians are fond of pointing out, is a frustrating experience. Pull out a drawer and one not only can see what he is after, but can lift it out without having to rearrange an assortment of other jars.

Pioneer in the use of refrigerated drawers is the Acme-National Co. The Acme Tru-Zone refrigerator has two big drawers plus extra pull-out trays inside these main drawers.

In a cabinet 36 inches high—the standard height of kitchen work counters—27 inches wide and 24 inches deep, Acme provides 8 cubic feet of refrigerator space. The equivalent storage space in conventional refrigerators would require a much larger cabinet. Drawers roll easily on nylon rollers.

Immigrants Costly

TEL AVIV (AP)—It costs a lot of money to "absorb" the tens of thousands of Jewish immigrants flocking into this country from all parts of the world. The bill for the last 26 months was $320,000,000.

That's the figure reported by statisticians for the Jewish Agency Executive. They reported 350,000 immigrants were "absorbed." Being "absorbed" means the newcomers found a place to live and work and had fitted themselves into the productive channels of the nation's economy.

Inspiration's Out

Inventing Is Mostly Logic and Hard Work

Inventor James H. Rand, 3d, holds his latest invention, a piece of cloth treated with a clothes-heating process called "Milium." Clothes are made warmer in winter, cooler in summer by spraying fibers with fine particles of aluminum

By Saul Pett

NEW YORK, Sept. 9.—Most inventors, you'll be intrigued to learn, work harder than Don Ameche did on the telephone.

"Inventing isn't inspirational: It's clear, orderly thinking and hard work," says James H. Rand 3d, who at 37 is one of our most prolific and successful inventors.

"You don't pull ideas out of the air," he adds. "You don't jump up in the middle of the night with solutions. You must have a problem first, then your experiments and long observation and finally you may have something."

More often than not Rand has come up with "something" in the reconverted barn he and his associates use for a laboratory in Cleveland, Ohio.

Among other things, he developed life-saving surgery equipment, an electric razor, a flood-control diaper, a faucet valve which doesn't leak, an air mattress which massages the bodies of sick people and prevents bedsores.

And a flexible washing machine which brought its inventor $500,000 in cash for the patent rights and another $500,000 in the first two years of royalties.

HIS LATEST invention—a clothes-heating process called "Milium"—well illustrates Rand's thesis that invention is more logic and work than inspiration. He explained it on a recent trip to New York.

A clothing manufacturer asked Rand if he could develop an electrically heated overcoat.

"We had to start off," Rand says, "by analyzing what he really wanted. Obviously he couldn't use a wired coat powered with awkward batteries. That was impractical. What he really wanted was to keep somebody warm.

"Well, you don't make a person warm. You keep him from getting cold. How then can he retain his body heat? That was the problem.

"So I reached up to my shelf for a physiology book and consulted a chapter on body warmth. This showed that the most important loss of body heat comes from a form of radiation. In fact, 80 percent is lost that way.

"Immediately, as Wallace Nichols, my assistant, and I saw the word 'radiation', we started thinking of materials which reflect heat back. The aluminum foil in your houses does just that, you know. So we asked the manufacturer what the textile industry has done about heat-reflective materials. He said he had never heard of it.

"I SENT a boy up to the attic for some tin foil. I made a bag of the foil and had the manufacturer insert his hand. He was surprised to see that his hand got warmer that the body heat in his hand was reflected back by the tin foil.

"The man was impressed but he said we couldn't put tin foil in clothes. I said it was a developmental problem. If we worked long enough we'd be able to fasten aluminum particles to threads.

"Well, it took longer than I thought. It took a year of continual experimenting. We worked with 10 different chemical firms. Some of the processes wouldn't dry-clean. Others wouldn't wash. Also, we found that if you play with aluminum too much it becomes heat-absorbing rather than heat-reflecting."

Finally, after a year, Rand and his coworkers came up with what they were looking for—an aluminum finish applied to clothes lining by spraying the fibers with fine particles of the metal.

Rand says it doesn't change the porosity of the fabric treated and it does reflect back to the body a large part of the heat radiated by it. In the summer, he says, the same treated cloth helps keep the wearer cool by reflecting away some of the sun's heat.

Rand, the son of the president of Remington Rand, Inc., was born in Pelham, N. Y., whipped through high school in two years, studied medicine briefly at home and abroad and then went to Cleveland.

There, one day, he heard a pilot lecturing on the problems of high-altitude flying. One big obstacle, it seemed, was measuring and regulating the amount of oxygen in plane cabins.

Rand thought the answer was simple. All you have to do, he told the pilot after the lecture, is to light a match. Ridiculous, said the pilot. Too dangerous, he said.

SO RAND went home and devised an instrument which mixed plane-cabin atmosphere with hydrogen in small amounts and tested it with a spark. He took his gadget to Vincent Bendix, president of Bendix Aviation Corp., who immediately gave him $1000 in cash for the idea and hired him at $10,000 a year for half his time.

That started Rand as an inventor. Among other things, he produced a plastic shoe sole and a ball-point fountain pen which nobody thought practical at the time. Also, he did a little job for his father, turning out an electric razor which is still on the market.

With a stake of $200, he made a plastic watch strap which he sold to a jewelry manufacturer. Out of that deal, Rand and his partners earned $30,000 in the first five months of production.

A year later he set up his research laboratory in Cleveland where he now has a staff of scientific and mechanical experts. Each employe shares the profits of any invention he helps develop. One man who helped on the washing machine will receive $15,000 a year for the next 20 years for that work alone.

His biggest thrill, Rand says, was in devising a mechanical "heart squeezer." This is a massaging device, he says, which can start a heart pumping again and retain normal blood pressure even after the heart itself stops suddenly during an operation.

ELECTRICAL TIPS FOR THE HOME

If You Intend to Redecorate or Remodel This Fall . . .

DON'T let ugly, makeshift electrical extensions spoil the looks of a newly-decorated room. They're not only unsightly, but they're also unsafe.

DO provide enough convenience outlets for all your lamps and appliances. Space them every 12 feet along the wall and in smaller areas of 3 feet or more.

'Hide' Pipes and Radiators

When redecorating a room, paint pipes and radiators to match the walls and thus render them inconspicuous. The lighter the tints used, the more heat given off, experts will tell you. Flat paint is the best type of coating to use.

Seay Company Formed

A new realty firm, the Joseph W. Seay Co., has been formed with offices at 113 West Broad st., Falls Church. The company is successor to the firm of Eastman & Seay. A complete real estate service is offered.

The Garden Is a Step Away

AN EXAMPLE of what architects mean when they talk about "indoor-outdoor living" is a house designed by Architect Alwen Cassens of Rockville center, Long Island, N. Y. He has gathered the garden into the living room by having two large widows overlook the back lawn and plantings.

Here are other features of the home:

Exterior mostly of sage-gray wood shingles, with front walls of pink common brick. Both will wear years without attention. Casement windows are of aluminum; those in the bedroom wing have high sills for privacy and versatile furniture arrangements.

The living room has an 8-foot wide, floor-to-ceiling brick fireplace chimney, flanked by built-in bookshelves and walls of knotty pine. All three bedrooms are cross ventilated. Overall exterior width of the home is 58 feet. The depth is 45 feet.

Concrete Masonry Advantageous in Home Building

USE of concrete masonry in wall construction has five advantages, according to a pamphlet, "Concrete Masonry," issued by the Housing and Home Finance Agency. The advantages are listed as:

Economy, resistance to fire, suitability for both load-bearing and nonload-bearing walls or partitions, use as back-up in walls for other facing materials, and adaptability to various styles of architecture.

The pamphlet is available from the Superintendent of Documents, Government Printing Office, Washington 25, D. C., at 25 cents a copy. It covers materials, standards, manufacturing processes, curing procedures, and recommendations for building walls.

In 1949 the United States Government Printing Office handled 2000 carloads of paper and printed 3217 million postal cards, according to the Encyclopedia Americana.

Institute Says

Contemporary-Style Home Is Answer to Supply Shortages

This house in Syracuse, N. Y., is an example of contemporary styling sponsored by the Quality House Division of the Southwest Research Institute. The institute says that this type of home uses less critical materials, may be the answer to material shortages should another world war develop CONTEMPORARY - STYLE homes — which use large window areas and less critical materials—offer a solution to building material shortages, sponsors of this type of house believe.

Taking note of National Home Week, the Quality House division of the Southwest Research Institute asserts that the answer to many American building problems lies in more extensive use of the contemporary house style.

Characteristics of this type of house include more "open planning" in the arrangement of rooms, frequent use of wood, stone and brick finishes instead of conventional plaster; large windows that result in "tieing-together" the interior of the house with outdoor garden and lawn to create more living space, and quality planning and construction that conserve heating fuels and make for enduring values.

"Contemporary-type houses are steadily growing in popularity and acceptance," according to C. W. Smith, San Antonio, director of the division.

"Builders and their architects are finding ready marketability for contemporary houses that embrace new ideas and convenience in their design," he says.

"IN ADDITION to this, because of the use of simple building materials, the contemporary style of architecture puts less drain on many building materials that may become short if the Korean war spreads into a world conflict.

In many ways, contemporary houses may easily become the best answer as to how to erect quality houses of attractive character during emergency building conditions."

The Quality House Division of Southwest Research encourages contemporary planning across the country. Its function is to get architects and builders to team up and build this type of house. Where such houses are accepted by the institute, a seal of approval is issued and public showing of the houses are sponsored.

THE PROGRAM was founded in 1947, and is supported by a group of sponsoring manufacturers, including Revere Copper and Brass, Inc., and the Crane Co. In the last two years, more than 300 homes approved by it have been built over the Nation.

A counseling service is maintained by the division, to which builders and architects may submit plot plans, sketches and outline specifications.

These are reviewed, suggestions made, and if accepted, the division aids with a program of publicity and promotion for the houses, designed to help show the public the advantages of quality building and design.

Force Price Hike

Chinese Reds Stingy With Pig Bristles

THE bristles of Chinese pigs are becoming an uncommon commodity. Chinese communists are to blame.

What with Chinese pig bristles in short supply, their cost per pound is soaring.

Consequently, the cost of a completed home may well advance ever - so - slightly more. Whether this happens or not is up to the man who paints the house. It's costing him more now to do the job if he's using a new Chinese pig bristle brush.

You see, explains the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., brushes used by professional painters—the high quality, long bristle, long wearing kind—are made of bristles from Chinese pigs. The company has just been forced to increase the cost of its Chinese pig bristle brushes by seven percent.

But let Kent D. Currie, divisional sales manager of the company, outline the situation:

"More than 75 percent of the cost of producing these brushes is in the bristle cost. The average cost of bristle today, based on the China assortment, is better than $11 per pound as compared with $2.30 in 1939."

Ability of the Chinese communists to manipulate bristle prices has kept first qaulity brushes fluctuating wildly during the past five years, according to Currie.

"Pittsburgh Plate's brush prices have been moved up or down 12 times since the close of World War II. Frequently, printed price lists have become obsolete before they are distributed," he said.

About 95 percent of the high grade bristle used by the brushmaking industry is imported from China, the company said.

Life Insurance Firms Report Realty Activities

COMMERCIAL and industrial rental properties made up most real estate purchases by the Nation's life insurance companies in the first half of 1950, according Institute of Life Insurance.

A total of $100 millions in real estate purchases were recorded in the six-month period. A breakdown shows that 56 million dollars were spent for commercial properties; 26 million dollars for additions to rental housing projects owned by the companies; 15 million dollars in properties for company use; and $3 millions spent on miscellaneous properties.

At mid-year, realty holdings of life insurance companies came to $1,316,000,000. The institute reported this is an increase of 80 million dollars since January 1.

Curious Reaction

TV Viewers Howl About Color Ruling

By Sonia Stein

SOME of the reaction to the Federal Communications Commission's color television decision is both silly and selfish. Like a car owner insisting that no jeeps be sold because his own car will not climb a mountain, a new non-profit group called "Tele-Viewers" was organized in Washington "in the interests of set owners" and set up a howl because it may not be able to get on its sets something it does not now get and has never been promised.

Under the recent FCC decision, it looks as if the Columbia Broadcasting System's ready-for-use system of color TV will be adopted sooner or later, although the FCC is trying to give the other contenders and any late comers a chance to come up with something better by December 5.

The big complaint against the CBS system—the most legitimate one since it has proven itself as a rugged, faithful color system—is that it cannot be seen on regular black-and-white sets without some adjustment.

ADJUSTMENT IS CHEAP compared to the initial investment of the set, and it need not be made at all for some time if the owner chooses to limit himself to such programs as he already has available to him. The only reason for making the adjustment would be to get something extra which is not now offerered to him.

To say that adoption of the "incompatible" system means giving the seven million current set owners "second class televiewing," as say, "Tele-Viewers" is so much hot air. CBS has said it will put on 20 hours of color programming within 30 days after a definite decision is reached by the FCC. It need hardly be pointed out that no sponsored show on any network—and most shows are sponsored on TV these days—will be produced in color at first. The sponsor wants maximum coverage and he won't get it if only a handful of sets are converted to color or adapted to get color programs in black and white.

By the time a sufficiently large proportion of the set owners have either invested a piddling $15 to $50 (price depends on who is estimating at this stage) to have sets adapted, sponsors will be willing to offer color shows.

By that time, if "Tele-Viewers" haven't adapted their seven million sets, or even converted them for color reception at a slightly larger fee, then they are not the up and coming we-want-what's-new people the country's first seven million set purchasers should be.

The color shows which would be offered until that time will be primarily—although not exclusively, to be sure—during the fringe hours when little major programming in black and white is now being done.

TO BUY OR NOT to buy still remains the question for those who have not already bought a set. Since it is clear we won't have color TV in time for the Christmas tree, it looks as if you may as well go ahead. The FCC is doing everything it can to ease this situation and has come up with a corking good jest in the process.

By telling the manufacturers—most of whom don't want the CBS color standards adopted for reasons known best to their sales departments—that they must agree to put in adaptors at the factory (a cheaper process than adding them outside later) by September 29 or else the FCC

Maybe Carol Will Be Our Own Bea Lillie

By Richard L. Coe

CAROL CHANNING, the "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" girl, has been called the star of the year by everyone who's seen her—critics and public alike—but the management doesn't seem to have been listening.

This week underlined why Producers Levin and Smith haven't yet made their ads read: "Carol Channing in 'Gentlemen Prefer Blondes.'" Carol's laryngitis has finally nabbed her after 10 months of the raucous Lorelei Lee and though no doubt Bibi Osterwald, the former Government Gal who's been subbing for her is okay, had Carol been the star, receipts would have dipped badly.

Carol, who's almost as much of a character as her portrait of the Lorelei which Brooks Atkinson has called "the most fabulous comic creation of this generation," is less concerned about her lack of professional billing than her friends. Those who've seen her in the sketches of "Lend an Ear" and watched her devastating Lorelei Lee have the feeling that Carol can be to American musicals what Beatrice Lillie has been to the British.

As you can see from this picture of her, she's an extravagant creature, big, wide eyes, comical just to look at. With a surprising combination of throaty tones and baby voice, Carol's equally startling to listen to.

THE SHOW is now a smoother affair and has better support for the "star" than the early tryout performance I reported on in Philadelphia last November. But Carol's detailed etching of the wide-eyed innocent still towers over everything else in the big musical. While I'm convinced that Carol must have lost weight in being energetic eight times a week all these months, for she's not quite so Amazonian, she still delivers such numbers as "I'm Just a Little Girl from Little Rock" and "Diamonds are a Girl's Best Friend" with more personal wham than anyone since Ethel Merman ascended the musical comedy throne.

Delivery has long been Miss Channing's forte. When she was a 16-year-old California school girl, she surprised herself by winning a first prize trip to Honolulu in an oratorical contest. "The subject was 'What American Citizenship Means to Me' and there were 10,000 contestants. I spoke terribly seriously and I guess it was the characterization rather than the content that clinched the prize for me. It was so wholesome! I had a wonderful time in Hawaii, except that reporters kept asking for my opinion of the foreign situation and, of course, I didn't have any."

CAROL'S father is one of the leaders of the Christian Science Church, which is the reason you don't find her with the rest of the cast advertising that popular beer.

"Dad sent me to Bennington College, where I took drama, but I just couldn't compete with the intellectuals so I moved down to Greenwich Village. I worked out an act of impersonations and Dad's money helped keep me going. Bibi and I used to play some of the same dates and I spent one summer on the borscht circuit in the Catskills. I was a big girl then, too, but when the other performers would call me 'a big, fat cow' I didn't have brains enough to sass 'em back. It takes a while to harden yourself to this business."

Next came an understudy job—for Eve Arden in "Let's Face It." Eve was only sick once. She must have remembered John Barrymore's crack about understudies: "The hell with the understudy. It's my job to keep him from getting on the stage."

WEARY OF GOTHAM, Carol hit out for the coast and home, figuring she'd tried the stage and failed. "I got a job in the French Salon of I. Magnin, San Francisco, where I was a model. I'd traipse around stepping through lace hems and gabbing to the customers so much that the store people kept saying, 'Please don't talk. Just stand there and look like alabaster.' I was finally demoted to the stock room."

The understanding Mr. Channing decided to back his daughter for one more stab at entertaining. This finally brought her to the tryouts for "Lend an Ear," which opened on the coast. She was an instant wow in the revue and it was while watching her in that one that Anita Loos realized her generation-long search for a musical Lorelei had ended.

Anita Loos will probably be part of the next Channing chapter, too. Between them the writer and the star have cooked up as snappy an idea as ever I've heard for a musical comedy, but the details couldn't be pried from me by the FBI. Anyway, I'm hoping Carol will stick to Lorelei Lee for another year or so because we've got to have her play it in Washington.

THE COMEDIENNE'S personal life is second to her demanding part. She lives quietly in a small apartment with a garden in the east 60's. She sublets it from a man who's an authority on African art and the paintings of Picasso. The apartment's chock full of original Picassos, but I can vouch that the Gotham rumor about Carol replacing every one with pictures of herself in "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" is a total falsehood. The Picassos are all there and Carol loves 'em.

Her combined kitchen-dining room, opening onto the garden a la Georgetown hideaways would be the delight of our Lucia Brown. It's wood-paneled and has copper utensils decorating the walls.

Gone from the manse at the moment, though, is what Carol calls "The Ax." Ax is her husband, Al Carson, who's headed for Ottawa, where every fall he's with the Rough Riders football team. And it's Ax who provides you with one answer to the question: "What do pro footballers do when the season's over?" He's a private eye.

"So you see," says Carol, "we both work at night."

CAROL CHANNING

Hedda Hopper

Actors Like to Play Priests—Kelly, Too

HOLLYWOOD, Sept. 9—Gene Kelly wants to play the priest in "When in Rome," the picture Metro originally wanted Bob Walker for, then decided to rewrite it for Spencer Tracy. Bob's turned down two stage plays, and at present has no picture commitment . . . Kelly, incidentally, will stage the dance numbers for "An American in Paris," when Vince Minnelli starts directing "Father's Little Dividend."

BRANDO

Things are getting rough all over. Marlon Brando dislocated his shoulder during a scene in "Streetcar Named Desire," and Kim Hunter's lip was cut in the same picture. Pat Buttram had four stitches taken in his head when Sheilah Ryan conked him with a pistol during a Gene Autry TV film. Since Pat, the comic, is in many of the important scenes, he had to finish up with his head bandaged.

TIME marches on: In 1943 Warner Brothers completely whitewashed Russia in "Mission to Moscow." Now, seven years later, Harry Warner says: "We don't want anybody employed in our company who belongs to any communist, fascist, or un-American organization." Those are fine words. Sorry he didn't say them sooner.

Vivien Leigh is being praised by every worker on the "Streetcar" set. A crew member, who's worked in pictures for 17 years, said, "No star or player has ever been as gracious, considerate, patient, or intelligent as Miss Leigh." The rest agree.

WELCOME STRANGER: Director Joe Mankiewicz and his wife, Rosa Stradner, are back from Europe. They spent two weeks at Salzburg and received a royal welcome in Vienna, where Rosa used to star at the Max Reinhardt theater. Max's widow is staging the old plays in her husband's manner. Their fabulous palace is now a rest home for students . . . Joe was supposed to deliver the Oscar that Carol Reed won this year, but Reed was in Malaya, so Joe left it for him . . . Rosa was offered two stage plays in New York. She ought to be acting again. She's good. Remember her in "Keys to the Kingdom?"

ROYAL PRAISE: Irene Dunne, home from making "The Mudlark" in London, says, "Not only should we keep on exchanging players, but technical crews as well with England. There's no greater way of creating good will. The British were so cooperative that we finished our picture two weeks ahead of time."

If the Korean war still is raging, the Hollywood Canteen will be reopened at Christmas time. The Canteen board is buying a building in Hollywood this week, but I wouldn't dare tell its location. The price might be increased . . . Denise Darcel brought her mother and sister from Europe to New York. Her sister's really something. Has a fine voice and should go places.

Faye Emerson and Skitch Henderson make a mighty fine looking couple. He's always preferred blondes. Remember Anita Colby? . . . Those huddles between Monty Clift and Paramount could be because the studio wants to tie him up on a permanent deal. Monty did 14 interviews and picture layouts for them during his vacation. But I don't believe he'll sign a long-termer.

Aherne Is Next At Olney in 'Dear Brutus'

BRIAN AHERNE will be the next-to-closing star of the Olney Theater's summer season, opening a week's run tomorrow night in his revival of "Dear Brutus."

This is the James M. Barrie romantic fantasy about a group of people who are given their choice about reliving their lives.

Tomorrow night's performance will be a special benefit for the Washington Hospital Committee of the American Theater Wing. The cast and theater are all contributing their services for the event. Seats for the special benefit may be obtained by phone at DUpont 0381.

AHERNE has been starring in the play throughout the New England summer theaters and brings with him the top members of his supporting cast. Helen Craig, his leading lady, is best known for her creation of the deaf mute in the stage play, "Johnny Belinda." She has since appeared in "Lute Song" and "The Snake Pit."

Harry Ellerbe, who has directed a score of plays for Olney during the past three summers between his Broadway seasons, returns to the stage in another leading role. Originally an actor, his playin with Nazimova in "Ghosts" is remembered as the finest Oswald of our generation.

The part of the young girl, which Helen Hayes propelled Helen Hayes to stardom, will be acted by Carlotta Sherwood.

DIRECTOR Arthur Sircom's cast further includes Harry John C. Becher, Wanda Lyon and Mary Haynsworth.

ZaSu Pitts this afternoon and evening completes her Olney stay in "Post Road," with Becher and Miss Lyon in featured roles.

THE NEW LINDA: In "No Way Out" Linda Darnell has a part of greater realism than any that have come the young beauty's way. The film, which co-stars Richard Widmark, opens Wednesday at the Playhouse

Life of Haydn Packed With Fun and Facts

By Paul Hume

HUGHES, Rosemary: Haydn. Pellegrini and Cudahy, Inc. 244 pp. $2.50.

A series called Master Musicians does a great service when it produces something like the fun and true information Miss Hughes packs into this brief account of the life and work of Josef Haydn.

Of all those musicians whose greatness is unchallenged, Haydn is undoubtedly the least played, and often the least properly understood. Miss Hughes has distilled the essence of the man and his amazing humanity into a fine short book. She freely acknowledges her debt to recent Haydn scholars. In the number of pages at her disposal, she should do much to breathe life and interest into our incorrectly narrow views on Haydn.

For me, the great and constant fascination of the book was the growing desire it produced to hear more of the music we are so regularly denied. Why must there be no Haydn festivals in seasons when Beethoven, Brahms, and other composers are played over and over again?

Haydn's personal life is also opened to readers so that they may understand how truly he fitted into his period, and yet lived through the end of one great musical era and foretold another. His personal sorrows are clearly indicated, as well as his late triumphs in England and his own country.

Discussion of his music is given in the second half of the book, in terms understandable by laymen yet of commanding interest to musicians. This book should go to those responsible for our chamber concerts, symphony programs, and piano recitals.

If the tributes of Mozart and Beethoven were not misplaced, and they have never been challenged, who are we to continue to ignore the greater output of Haydn's genius?

DAVISON, ARCHIBALD T., and Apel, Willi. Historical Anthology of Music. Harvard University Press. 300 pp. $10.

True, this book is for musicians. It cannot be omitted from our columns. Too seldom does something of such scholarship and perfection in achievement come along.

This is Volume 2 of the series, whose name is the title of this book. It covers Baroque, Rococo, and Pre-Classical music. The boundaries of those periods are 1600 and 1780. Two hundred and seventy-six pages of music precede 24 pages of commentary on the composers, and invaluable translations of the Italian, French, and German texts.

Davison and Apel are two of the foremost scholars in the field, and their wisdom both in selecting and preparing material matches the standards of quality they have exhibited for years in their various publications.

This book, including music for orchestras, solo instruments of all kinds, choral excerpts and songs, should be a possession of most musicians making any pretense of interest in their metier. There is rich material here for recitals too long confined to the juiciest morsels of the overworked ninteenth century.

HALL, David. Records, 1950 edition. Alfred A. Knopf. 524 pp. $5.

David Hall's latest record book is the best arranged and most useful to record collectors of the three he has put out.

His data on recent developments in record playing speeds, machines, and the possibilities of the future are useful to those unable to find out what they ought to do about equipment.

Hall makes little attempt to make this book reach back beyond recent recordings. Therefore when he compares recordings, he sometimes does not list an older, though still outstanding item. Generally, however, he does give credit to such sets.

He is also wise to limit himself to records generally available in this country. His listings of the excellent releases of the smaller but vital companies lately entered in the business are a real help.

The book has too many mistakes in names, facts, and technical data for a book of its pretensions. So many of these are preventable that it is a shame to see Tourel credited with singing done by Sayao (p. 214), or to have Hall ask why Teyte did not use a "capable baritone to join her in the episodes allotted to Pelleas." Why not ask for a capable tenor, as Debussy did?

Other oddments include the fact that Lydia Summers is a contralto, not the soprano he calls her, that Sir Thomas Beecham cut one quarter of Gounod's Faust out of his recent recording, though Hall says it is complete.

These errors will not rob the book of its general utility pur-

'Of Mice and Men' Opens Tomorrow at Arena Stage

"OF MICE AND MEN" opens tomorrow night as the second production of the new Arena Stage in the restyled Hippodrome Theater.

The John Steinbeck drama won the New York Drama Critics' award in 1938 and later became a highly regarded film.

Edward Mangum is directing the play, which he has produced with Zelda Fichandler. Lester Rawlins, who played Tony Lumpkin in the group's highly-successful "She Stoops to Conquer," has the part of George, with Henry Oliver as the big, bumbling Lennie.

The only feminine role in the play will be acted by Dorothea Jackson, who played Constance Neville in the Goldsmith comedy. Henry Danilowicz, Jack Carter, Forrest Monroe, Tobe T. Fedder, Harry Scully and Stuart Smith complete the cast.

Vera Mowry, technical director of the theater, has created the lighting and settings.

The Arena Stage box office, Ninth st. and New York ave. nw., is open daily and seats may be reserved by phone at DIstrict 8592.

Gayety Office Open Tomorrow 'Barrier' Will Try Out Here

THE BOX OFFICE of the Gayety Theater will open tomorrow for the seat sale of Celeste Holm in "Affairs of State," which starts the theater's season a week from tomorrow night.

STRUDWICK

The play is a comedy about Washington life by Louis Verneuil, with Shepperd Strudwick, Reginald Owen and Barbara O'Neil in featured roles. The characters include a Senator, his younger wife, a youthful bachelor Senator, the Secretary of State and a political wheelhorse.

Verneuil is a French playwright who has written the comedy for Miss Holm and also is directing the play for Producers Richard W. Krakeur and Fred F. Finklehoffe.

MISS HOLM'S screen successes have included "Gentlemen's Agreement," "Come to the Stable" and "Champagne for Caesar." Strudwick's best remembered for the part of the doctor who assassinates the Governor in "All the King's Men." Owen returns to the stage after nearly 20 years in Hollywood, during which he's become one of its leading character actors. Miss O'Neil's favorite screen role was that of Scarlett's mother in "Gone with the Wind."

In preparation for the new season, which will include a series of six plays presented by the Theater Guild-American Theater Society, the Gayety has made several renovations from last summer.

NEW, padded seats have replaced the former orchestra chairs, which have been moved up to the top balcony which formerly had bench-type seats.

Backstage the stage flooring has been added to and scraped and the players' dressing rooms have been redecorated.

SUCCESS of the Gian-Carlo Menotti musical plays or operas in the commercial theater prompts the Broadway engagement of "The Barrier," which will play a tryout week at the Gayety Theater the week of the 25th.

TIBBETT

Lawrence Tibbett, the great American baritone, has the leading role in this work by Langston Hughes and Jan Meyerowitz. It is adapted from Hughes' play, "The Mulatto," and Meyerowitz, of the Berkshire music center faculty, has composed a score that aroused great interest in its Ann Arbor premiere this summer.

Muriel Rahn, best known as the original Carmen of "Carmen Jones," is costarred with Tibbett. Since her success in the Rodgers-Hammerstein-Bizet musical, she has concentrated on concertizing.

Wilton Clary, who was the leading man of "Oklahoma!" when that play closed the National Theater, has just assumed the major featured role.

The production is being coproduced by Michael Myerberg, whose previous novelties have included "The Skin of Our Teeth," "Dear Judas" and "Lute Song."

Barter Gave Mary a Start

MARY MILLER, a native of Winchester, Va., plays the part of Martha Washington in the National Capital Sesquicentennial's historic drama, "Faith of Our Fathers," written by Paul Green.

MILLER

Miss Miller, a graduate of William and Mary College at Williamsburg, became interested in the theater while at school. During the summer of 1948, a year before her graduation, she played the leading comedy role in Green's "Common Glory."

Following her graduation, Miss Miller joined the Barter Theater group which was formed by Robert Porterfield in Abingdon, Va. She toured with this group in "You Can't Take It With You," "For Love or Money," and others.

Miss Miller is the first recipient of the Drama Association of the State of Virginia's award that has become an annual recognition of the best actor, actress and playwright, the final selection being held in Richmond each year.

Menuhin Talks About Fascism

By W. G. Rogers

NEW YORK (AP). — Yehudi Menuhin, the violinist, and his wife, former Sadler Wells Ballerina Diana Gould, have left this city on their fiftieth flight of the year.

At 33, Menuhin is celebrating his twenty-fifth anniversary on the concert platform. He has his nose to the grindstone, or his chin to the violin, for he has toured five continents in as many months.

Here for a day they talked a couple of hours with the press. . . . This press. The first hour was the violinist's, while he and I were all alone. The second hour, while we were all together, all belonged to his wife, the vivacious step-daughter of Sir Cecil Harcourt, Britain's second sea lord.

THE MUSICIAN talked about wonderful new Israel, where he has just played three benefit concerts; about racial tension and injustice in South Africa; and about the unhappy reception tendered here to some earnest and worthy musicians on the basis of pro-Fascist sympathies.

American-born Menuhin, sedate, reserved, informed, looks and acts like the Englishman, English-born Mrs. Menuhin, animated, witty, demonstrative, looks and acts rather the American. She's a slender woman with mobile, expressive features; and if she took over the conversation so that no one else got a word in edgewise, that was the way everyone else wanted it.

Her husband, his nails clipped back away from the strings, limbered up his average-length fingers by cracking the knuckles. His hair was mussed, a lock of it that should have been over here falling instead over there.

"IN PALESTINE," he said, "I played to one audience made up of what are called peasants, who grow crops and till the soil; they knew Bartok and Bach. . . .

"It's curious how often the conductors object when reportedly pro-Fascist conductors are invited to this country, and how often the pianists complain when reportedly pro-Fascist pianists are asked to appear. Why doesn't an oboeist ever find fault? When a passport is visaed in Europe for admission to the United States, it is done on the basis of complete facts, parents, cultural and political activities, police record, everything. Yet once approved by the State Department, some of them come here only to be denied by some other department the chance to make music lovers happy.

"I shall be playing abroad later under Joseph Krips. From the work I've heard myself, he's a fine conductor. That's the heart of the matter, isn't it?" (Joseph Krips secured a visa to conduct in Chicago, but his admission was challenged on unrevealed grounds and he was turned back in New York.)

MRS. MENUHIN has had about enough flying. . . . "Let's face it." For the first time in her husband's career, the failure of a scheduled flight obliged him to miss a concert. She told of the South American trip in "an old crate tied with strings" with prudent natives spending all the hours in the air on their knees counting their beads.

She has washed her husband's shirts, and her own things, practically all around the world. "Hotel service abroad isn't what you enjoy here. And the packing! With two suitcases apiece, I plot and diagram and map out space for everything, though I'm apt to discover in Vienna that the left shoe of which we have the right, is back in Omaha."

Eddie (WTOP) Gallaher ON RECORDS

LENNIE HAYTON, the M-G-M musical director who married Lena Horne, is generally credited with being the man who taught Bing Crosby how to sing. It was he who persuaded Bing to drop the "buh-buh-booing" and other affected mannerisms which created his initial vogue back in the early '30s, and substitute the direct, natural style of vocal delivery which all of us Crosby fans love so well.

Jo Stafford has a surprise hit in "No Other Love," the beautiful Chopin adaptation she recorded for Capitol.

Al Jolson has applied for permission to entertain our troops in Korea. A similar trip overseas in World War II led to a malaria attack which nearly cost the veteran entertainer his life.

A NEW and important type of star has recently emerged on records. Heretofore the popular records have been the product of vocalists and dance band leaders, with an occasional novelty group like the Three Suns also rising to prominence.

To these must be added a new star category, the musical conductor. These men are talented arrangers, who have no orchestra of their own but who conduct groups of studio musicians, usually with choral accompaniment. When you consider the number of fine records these conductors are making, you realize that this is the most important development in popular records in years.

Gordon Jenkins, who started this new trend, is appropriately responsible for the top hit record in the country today, "Goodnight, Irene." Other recruits to the ranks of the new category of star conductors are Mitch Miller ("Tzena, Tzena, Tzena," Columbia), Hugo Winterhalter ("Count Every Star," RCA Victor), Victor Young ("Mona Lisa," Decca), and Percy Faith ("I Cross My Fingers," Columbia). These fine musicians, who for years were relegated to the tack of conducting accompaniments for well-known performers, have literally emerged from the background into the star spotlight.

VICTOR YOUNG, besides being a conductor, is also the composer of "My Foolish Heart" in collaboration with Ned Washington. The success of the song led somebody to remember that this same team wrote some wonderful songs together many years ago. The result is the revival of one of their best efforts, "Can't We Talk It Over?," now featured in a listenable 1950 version by the Andrews Sisters (Decca).

Perry Como rarely makes a theater appearance, and is practically never seen either entertaining or being entertained in a night club. The reason? Perry's a guy who really loves his home and his family, and accepts as few engagements as possible which take him away from them. Perhaps that's why his record of "Bless This House" (RCA Victor is a superlative performance which will be treasured in countless American homes for years to come.

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9:00 a. m.; Moondial, 11:30 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

An Art Show That's 'Different'

"Ill-fated War Party's Return," by Allan Houser, an Apache Indian; first prize winner in Philbrook Art Center competition in Tulsa., Okla.

By Jane Watson Crane

LINKING THE ARTS to the history and manner of life of the earliest Americans, the Indians, the National Collection of Fine Arts of the Smithsonian has assembled an illuminating exhibition, featuring prehistoric examples with paintings by contemporaries, and suggestive influences from the white man in the long years between. The show, devoted to one of the least known aspects of American culture, has much to offer and is an interesting departure from the conventional art exhibits. It is a pity that its scheduled run is so short; opened this weekend, it will close the 24th.

Included in the prehistoric section is an Indian arrow-head which was found imbedded in the vertebra of an extinct bison, dramatic evidence of its age. Identified with it by association are a pointed stone graver, a palette and a sample of the ore which furnished red pigment, all indicative of early drawing and painting among Indians of North America.

As revealed in the show by a map containing reproductions of ancient drawings according to location, pictures "painted, drawn, scratched, or pecked on rock surfaces by Indians have been found in nearly all the States of the Union. They are clearly not up to the famous Altamira cave paintings found in Europe, but should be particularly revealing to the modern artist intent on exploring all primitive arts except those of his own land.

EMPHASIS throughout is on the pictorial rather than symbolic aspect of Indian painting and drawing. Included are three half-scale reproductions of mural fragments from the old Hopi villages of Awatovi and Kawaika-a lent by the Peabody Museum of Harvard and copied by artists from the original wall paintings.

Among the Pueblo Indians of the Southwest, murals were painted on the walls of ceremonial chambers from the fifteenth century A. D. With the coming of the Christian missions a century later, the pagan began to be linked with the Christian in their religious decoration. Visitors to the Southwest today are struck by the bizarre effect of an ancient tribal ceremony or religious rite performed in front of an altar featuring the Madonna and Child, they often find on entering one of the churches that similar combinations occur in the interior, where saints and gods in image dwell side by side.

Nineteenth century Indian arts include a group of original drawings made by Hopi artists with the encouragement of Dr. Fewkes, an anthropologist, who furnished them with paper, pigments and brushes; and a series of paintings on skins worn as mantles by Apache warriors and medicine men. There is also a water color which was done by a Cheyenne Indian on a visit to Washington in the latter part of the century.

THE CONTEMPORARY group comes from the Philbrook Art Center in Tulsa, Okla., which under the direction of Director Bernard Frazier, has been offering annual competitions to American Indian painters. Allan Houser, Apache Indian, is winner of the Grand Purchase Prize in the July, 1950, exhibition in Tulsa. His work is known in Washington, for he was one of the commissioned artists to decorate the walls of the upstairs cafeteria in the new Interior Department Building. His winning painting, a sophisticated blend of the art of Indian and white man, is displayed.

Some winners of former years are shown in a selection which consists of about 50 in all, by Indians of the Plains and Woodland regions as well as of the Southwest. Most remote geographically but not least in interest is the work of Eskimos of Alaska.

There are sentimentalists who would like to see the Indians turn the clock back, sticking exclusively to their traditional symbolic and religious arts, grinding their own pigments, dipping their rugs in the natural vegetable dyes and the like. We have never been able to understand why, in this land of progress, the Indians should be expected to stand still. The current Smithsonian exhibition of the National Collection of Fine Arts, reveals modern Indian paintings based more or less on tradition. But the materials used are contemporary, and the development of this type of pictorial art is a decorative by-product, representing a different point of view toward art than traditional, which related art to religion or the needs of life.

Stamps Set Record; Convention Here

By William M. Stuart

THE TREMENDOUS number of commemorative stamps issued by the Post Office Department every year is not fully realized by the average collector. Figures showing the number of stamps printed are appalling. The stamp program for 1950 calls for 11 stamps, 10 of which will have been issued by the end of September. Another will be issued in November, completing the year's program.

STUART

From the issue of the American Bankers Association stamp in January to the California Statehood stamp in September, the printing order totaled 1,187,000,000. The Bankers, Railroad Engineers, Gateway to the West, Indana Territory and California Statehood stamps called for a printing order of 115 million each. The Gompers stamp printing order called for 112 million, while that for Freedom, Executive, Boy Scouts and Judicial called for 125 million each. The number of first day cancelations, or first day covers, is well worth notice. Covers canceled from January to date reveal huge numbers. Altogether, the above figures reach a staggering total.

THE SIXTY-FOURTH annual convention of the American Philatelic Society opened at the Shoreham Hotel with about 200 members and guests registering Tuesday and Wednesday. The convention was formally begun Wednesday, Wilbur F. Cannon of Davenport, Iowa, the president, presiding. The exhibition was also formally opened. Tuesday evening a reception was given the visitors when the A. P. S. officers were presented. The convention photograph was taken at noon on Tuesday.

There were two auctions by John A. Fox of New York Wednesday. On Thursday the members and guests were taken to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing under the personal escort of Director Alvin W. Hall. The annual banquet was held Thursday and awards of the prizes at the exhibition were announced.

The exhibit was one of the finest held in Washington and was mounted under the direction of Svend Yort, who with his assistants performed a difficult task. Mrs. Virginia Woodin of Arlington, Va., had a most unusual display of philatelic mementos from a world cruise and also exhibited "Miss Philately" of postage stamps. A special cacheted envelope, the convention souvenir, was sold during the convention and on the mezzanine level a branch United States postoffice was opened, special convention cancelations being given. The "jury of award" comprised: Winthrop S. Boggs, Orange, N. J., chairman; Perry W. Fuller and Michael Miller of Baltimore; Fred Jarrett, Toronto, Canada; Van Dyk MacBride, Newark, N. J.; Lawrence L. Shenfield, New York, N. Y., and Philip H. Watd, jr., of Philadelphia.

Registration at convention began Tuesday and among the arrivals were:

Lloyd D. Bartlett, Grafton, Ohio; Forest A. Blank, Leominster, Mass.; Julian Blanchard, New York; C. W. Brazer, New York; Roger H. Bryant, Worcester, Mass.; Herbert Buchanan, Falls Church, Va.; Joseph Butler, New York; William F. Cannon, Davenport, Iowa; George Edwards, Elmwood Park, Ill.; Edwin E. Elkins, New York; Max G. Gateman, Yonkers, N. Y.; Fred E. Farnham, Bangor, Mich.; Miss Edith H. Fisher, Newark, N. J.; John A. Fox, New York; Sol Glas, Baltimore, Md.; Julius F. Gros, Yonkers, N. Y.; C. J. Gruhl, Milwaukee, Wis.; Fred A. Gaebler, Rochester, N. Y.; Fred C. Husing, Oakland, Calif.; Burleigh E. Jacobs, Wauwatosa, Wis.; A. Murl Kimmel, Robison, Kans.; W. F. McCandles, New Brighton, Pa.; Charles F. Menoni, Park Ridge, Ill.; Edwin C. Metsen, Milwaukee, Wis.; H. Clay Musser, State College, Pa.; L. Virginia Raymond, Rochester, N. Y.; Stephen G. Rice, Verona, N. J.; Dr. Charles Roser, Louisville, Ky.; Chester Smeltzer, Ramsey, N. J.; Howard Smith, Gardner, Mass.; Adolph Steeg, Buffalo, N. Y.; Marcus W. White, Worcester, Mass.; Stanley H. Wright, Arlington, Va.

AMONG THE awards of the exhibition were the following: The Smeltzer cup for foreign essay and proof exhibit; the Brazer trophy II; the "Napex" awards for the first award in each of the 14 sections. There were two grand awards, one for United States including Confederate States, and one for foreign.

The convention and exhibition were a success in every detail. The committees in charge included: Joseph A. Herbert, jr., chairman; James H. Bower, Samuel M. Burgess, 2nd, Stanley Wright, David D. Caldwell, Ellery Denison, Maj. James T. DeVoss, C. C. Fisher, Mrs. Grace L. MacKnight, Svend Yort, Admiral George C. Dyer, Dr. George L. Fite, Col. Otis K. Sadler and Harold F. Sipe.

On Saturday the National Federation of Stamp Clubs, Inc., held an all day meeting with business sessions, organization, election of officers and a banquet.

During the convention there were meetings of the Essay Proof Society, Bureau Issues Association, Western Express Unit and Confederate Alliance.

The Washington Philatelic Society as a chapter of the A. P. S. sponsored the convention.

THE AUCTION SALES Wednesday afternoon and evening were conducted by John A. Fox of New York, with Paul Weeks of Washington as auctioneer. Material was excellent and the receipts totaled $28,000, a record figure for such sales.

The annual banquet was held Thursday evening, upward of 200 being present. Chairman Joseph Herbert, jr., of the convention committee, called the gathering to order and presented the society president, Wilbur F. Cannon of Iowa. Harry L. Lindquist of New York was toastmaster.

Guests who made short addresses were President Cannon, Adm. George C. Dyer, Herbert S. Chamberlain who represented the Post Office Department, Sol Glass, Van Dyk MacBride, Chester A. Smeltzer, Col. Ralph Kimble, editor of the American Philatelist and Svend Yort who did such a fine job in mounting the 400 frame exhibition.

THE COLLECTORS CLUB, Branch 5, S. P. A., met in Pythian Temple on Tuesday evening. Only routine business was taken up. Several of the members were at the A. P. S., convention in the Shoreham Hotel helping the committee on arrangements to complete the placing of the exhibition. The club will meet on Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

The grand award for the best frame of United States was awarded to Earl Antrim of Nampa, Idaho, and the grand award for foreign to Eugene E. Blazier of Vancouver, Wash.

The Record Player

Fuzzy Lalo Disk Is Backed By Siegmeister Folk Suite

LALO: Overture: Le Roi d'Ys. Minneapolis Symphony under Mitropoulos, with Siegmeister: Ozark Set, on the other side. Columbia ML 2123. $3.85.

Lalo's opera is forgotten today except for its overture, and a tenor aria. Mitropoulos rides the overture a little heavily, but it is a dramatic piece able to stand a good deal of pushing around. Its scoring is striking because it has so much of the French Wagnerian sound.

The recording is decidely fuzzy, and the playing lacks real polish.

Siegmeister's folk suite is fun, good for dinner music, background for conversation, or pure listening, if you are in light mood. It is well played, and recorded, and sounds much better than the Lalo overture.

Schubert: Divertissement a la Hongroise. Vronsky and Babin, duo-pianists. Columbia ML 2125.

This time V. and B. play the same piano, four hands. Schubert wrote lots of music for such arrangements, and the popular team has decided to record some of it. No reason why they have to play two pianos all the time, is there?

I am sorry to say that the music leaves me lukewarm, when it does not bore me. It seems repetitious, monotonous, and somewhat lacking in originality.

The playing is fine, pianos sound well, but it's all too much the same for me. The melodies are charming, the rhythms nice, but it all adds up to 24 minutes of pretty much the same thing over and over.

BLISS: Miracle in the Gorbals; also: Adam: Giselle. Covent Garden Orchestra under Lambert. Columbia ML 2117. $3.85.

Ballet time is coming soon. These two works are in the repertoire of the Sadlers Wells troupe, and they will bring Giselle with them this fall, having included the "Miracle" in their last tour.

Bliss's score is good for the ballet, but a little theatrical and pretentious for plain listening. It has fine moments, notably the last pages, where the real tragedy occurs.

It is stunningly played in this version, and sounds better here than in the original 78 version.

Adam's music for "Giselle" is as good as the famous scores for Sylphides, the Seasons, and many other classical ballets. It will interest those who want more ballet, because it has the familiar movements that mean life and sustenance to that large following.

American Art Parley Slated At Corcoran

SCHEDULED for late October at the Corcoran is a symposium on American art and history to be held in conjunction with the big "American Processional" exhibit. Art specialists and historians will figure as guest speakers and there will be a panel discussion on the role of the artist in relation to American history. The original script that accompanied "The Sioux War Panorama," will be read. The panorama was a series of related pictures painted in oil on a single canvas, the running commentary being presented as the enormous expanse of cloth was unrolled, forerunner in a sense of the talking motion picture and the animated cartoon. The Sioux panorama, presented by John Stevens, is one of the few surviving. It is owned by the Minnesota Historical Society and currently on loan to the Corcoran for the Sesquicentennial exhibit.

On view at the Smithsonian in the Division of Graphic Arts is a display of 36 prints in various media by Charles B. Rogers, head of the art department at Bethany College, Lindsborg, Kans.

About Books On Music

pose, but they mar its overall value.

GEIRINGER, Karl. The Lost Portrait of J. S. Bach. Oxford University Press.

Geiringer, Haydn's finest and most recent full biographer, is now preparing a book on the Bach family. In connection with his research for the book, he unearthed data concerning a "lost" portrait of Johann Sebastian himself. It was known to have been painted but was later lost sight of.

This brief monograph tells the story of the picture, done by Gottlieb Friedrich Bach, a cousin of the older cantor. It includes an excellent color reproduction of the picture.

In this Bach anniversary year, there will be many interested in securing a copy of this excellent, short study, and the revealing picture.

Evans Speaks Today At National Gallery

During September the Sunday programs at the National Gallery offer an introduction to the cultural and historical background relating to the French and Italian collections. This afternoon the lecture on St. Peter's and the Vatican will be supplemented by the March of Time film, "The Story of the Vatican." The speaker will be Grose Evans.

Next Sunday the talk will be on French palaces to be given by Margaret Bouton.

Orchestras Laying Plans

THE AGRICULTURE Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Dr. Frederick Fall is holding another round of auditions Friday at 8 p. m. in the Agriculture Department auditorium. Three major concerts are proposed for the 1950-51 season.

The Musical Arts Choir is holding a "behind the scenes" musical and tea Tuesday at 8 p. m. in Tabor Presbyterian Church, 2d and S sts. nw. Othello R. Wilson is conductor.

The Alexandria Civic Orchestra under Dr. O. Wendell Margrave is beginning rehearsals Tuesday at 8 p. m. in the band room of George Washington High School. Amateur musicians interested in participating are invited to attend. The orchestra has a particular need for string players, it is reported.

PATRICK HAYES, manager of the Hayes Concert Bureau, in discussing his coming winter and spring series, reports that he has made several hundred seats in Constitution Hall more attractive in price, following a two-year study and analysis of box office results.

Hayes noticed that the preponderance of attendance at the piano series recitals was on the left, or keyboard, side of the hall. He divided the house in half, left and right, and reduced the entire right side 25 percent or more in price. One may "cross the aisle" for the same concert, and save 25 percent, or move forward for the same amount of money as before, into a better seat. Hayes also noticed a band of empty seats from the twentieth to the twenty-sixth row at many concer's. He therefore lowered the price on these seats, permitting patrons who buy at the second orchestra price to move forward into these better seats (this means a change in scaling from rows A to X to rows A to R).

IS THIS FITTIN'? Here are Mr. and Mrs. Miniver, Greer Garson and Walter Pidgeon, on the Metro set after finishing the sequel to their great hit, "Mrs. Miniver." The picture's called "The Miniver Story," but you must admit Greer and Walter don't look too calm about it cannot risk letting more and more "incompatible" sets get on the market while it reconsiders the merits of the systems in December, the FCC has had a laugh—though possibly not the last one—on the manufacturers.

At no time in the nine months' hearings were witnesses more stubborn and uncooperative with the commissioners than when manufacturers were asked if they would build in adaptors to make sets capable of receiving CBS color in black and white.

RCA's representative gave such a don't-know answer that he was summarily dismissed and the Commission came close to issuing a subpena for the chairman of the board of RCA who did know the answer. When tempers cooled, it was evident that no subpena was needed. But when the chairman of the board, Brig. General David Sarnoff did appear, he talked about the astronomical millions of dollars these built-in adaptors would cost for a year's production, instead of the $20 or thereabouts they would cost the individual buyer.

This mechanical insurance against future adaptation problems costs too much, he said, although RCA offers relatively expensive insurance against set break-down in the home on a yearly basis without batting an eye.

Now, unless the manufacturers agree to put in the adaptors, no further hearings will be held to give another chance to systems now further developed by RCA and Color Television, Inc., as well as some newcomers.

What a gnashing of teeth there must be in the board of directors rooms! And that's not the only activity.

The Commission's decision about color television has stirred up frenzied activity — but right where it was least expected.

It was supposed before the decision that potential buyers of sets, would either start buying black and white sets because color was postponed, or would start ordering color sets to be sure they'd get the first ones available. But misunderstandings about the decision have left them up a tree—and motionless.

Two of the three groups which offered color systems for the FCC's consideration were expected to retire to lick their wounds in peace and quiet while the chosen one went into a 24-hour-a-day uproar of activity. But the FCC decision has put all three into an uproar.

While the two systems which the FCC has ruled out on the basis of past performance may be licking their psychological wounds, it's not in peace and quiet. Since the FCC has offered them one last chance to show what they can do before it definitely throws the decision to Columbia Broadcasting System's acceptable color method, there's midnight oil a-burning at the Radio Corporation of America's laboratories in Princeton, and way out in San Francisco where Color Television, Inc. is trying to get a newly inspired system from the paper to the equipment stage.

CBS, WHICH LOOKS like the sure winner at this point, is meantime busier than anybody. Besides answering questions of manufacturers who want to know what they had better do and how, besides getting Remington Rand well started on its manufacture of CBS-type color equipment for private line use in industry and schools no matter which way the FCC ultimately decides, and besides getting equipment ready to telecast color shows just as soon as the FCC gives the OK, the indefatigable laboratory at CBS in New York is pursuing every possible avenue of perceptible improvement that the FCC has said it might like to see in the CBS system.

All of the contenders have said they'll win out in the end, CBS, which had most reason to crow, walked warily. Dr. Peter Goldmark, originator of the CBS system, did permit himself to remark that "it is a great satisfaction that the system selected 10 years ago by CBS as the best had been vindicated by the Commission's decision." It has actually been that long since the system emerged, radiant, from the CBS laboratories. While it has undergone refinements over the years, it is still the same system.

Goldmark, who has preached for years that "compatibility is not color," did a little quiet chop licking over the fact that the Commission has now agreed officially, "compatibility . . . is too high a price to put on color."

Characteristically, when Goldmark got the news from Washington by telephone he gathered his staff together to break the news, to thank them for what they'd accomplished, and to say, "Boys, this means working harder than ever. We may have to put on another demonstration December 5 to refresh their memories as to what a good picture looks like."

But the FCC evidently remembered the picture during the hard months it poured over volumes of testimony belaboring the CBS system. Like the Chinese, the Commission decided that one picture is worth a thousand words.

To Address P-TA

Charles Laughton and Rosalind Russell will be heard tonight at 8:30 in "Edward, My Son," as the Theater Guild on the Air returns to WRC-NBC

Back and Forth Deal

Since producer-host William Keighley of CBS' "Lux Radio Theatre" has established his permanent home in New York, he plans to spend one week of each month there, the other three weeks in Hollywood.

Television Creating Shortage of Radios

Radio shortages in some models are in prospect because of television. Not only are many manufacturing going all out for television at the expense of radio production, but video sets call for large numbers of small radio tubes.

Not many months ago, television production was limited only by the supply of the cathode ray picture tubes. Now the greatest bottleneck is the supply of small radio tubes.

Rash Adds Another Spot

ABC Newsman Bryson Rash is now heard in a comprehensive news summary from 11 to 11:10 Monday through Friday nights over WMAL.

Rash is special features director of WMAL and ABC, as well as ABC White House correspondent. He has a regular 3:25 ABC network broadcast, "White House Report."

At 7 p. m., Rash is in the television studio ready to start "Telenews Daily." Aided by last minute films from correspondents all around the world, he is Monday evenings Rash goes off the air and screen at 7:15 in time to say hello to an assortment of human beings and varied animals and be back before the camera at 7:30 with the popular "Tallwaggers" program that holds the highest rating of any live local show originating in Washington.

CBS Won a Victory, But What's Next?

By C. E. Butterfield

NEW YORK (AP).—The overall effect of the latest decision on color television by the Federal Communications Commission—its second—is to leave the whole question still in a "pending" category.

Wayne Coy FCC Chairman

There can't be any doubt that CBS won a victory in the ruling, which, while declining to set final standards, highly favored the CBS system over RCA and CTI (Color Television, Inc.). This was in direct contrast to the earlier finding in 1947 when a differently constituted commission held that the CBS system was not ready.

What happens now, in view of the fact the FCC left the door open for further possibilities, depends on a number of factors.

Basic is the transmission question. Stations must go on the air with color before the public can get interested. In this connection CBS says it is "proceeding promptly with plans," adding it expects to have 20 hours a week "within 30 days after the commission makes its final decision."

Next must come the sets. The FCC has asked manufacturers to build receivers to tune in both CBS color and black and white. None of the present seven million or so sets in operation will function in color without special converters.

FINALLY, there is the public itself. Acceptance of color must rely entirely on how it reacts and how fast it buys new color receivers or adds converters to present sets. Meanwhile, black and white operations are to continue.

In leaving the door open, FCC set December 5 as the date when improvements and other systems, of which several are reported in the works, can be offered for consideration. A latch-string fastened to this door implied it would close and the CBS method be accepted immediately if manufacturers did not meanwhile cooperate in incorporating color equipment in new sets.

ON THE OTHER HAND, RCA has indicated it still has hopes for its system, which was urged on the grounds it would also fit into the present black and white operation. CTI only last week advised the commission it had an improved system to offer.

It should be apparent that color still has a number of obstacles to hurdle and that it is going to take some time after that to get under full operation.

Billy Rose, jack-of-all-entertainment trades, is adding television to his repertoire. Rose has signed a long term contract for the presentation of a weekly series of half hour TV dramas based on his original short stories. Titled "Billy Rose's Playbill," these programs will be aired each Tuesday over ABC-TV at 9. The first show will be October 3.

It's 'Studio One' vs. Montgomery

The handsomely staged dramatic series with the unwieldy title, "Robert Montgomery Presents Your Lucky Strike Theater," returns tonight after a summer vacation. The opening show in the every-other-week series Montgomery produces for WNBW-NBC (9:30 p. m.) revolves around a divorcee who's fiancee begins to suspect her of indiscretions.

Last year the Montgomery series took a heavy slice out of the audience normally devoted to CBS' "Studio One." Starting half an hour earlier and running halfway into the "Studio One" period, the program played havoc with the Hooper. It's hard to tear yourself away from even the weakest soap opera once you're into it, and to tear yourself away from a good TV drama seems impossible.

"Studio One" will put up the good fight tonight (WTOP-TV, 10 p. m.) with "Mist," by Rita Weiman. Tonight's dramatization stars Tamara Geva, Stanley Ridges and Sally Chamberlain.

Jane Wyatt joins Lee Bowman in "The Awful Truth" tonight at 9:30 on WNBW when "Robert Montgomery Presents Your Lucky Strike Theater"

That'll Be Tracy On Your Screen

Wendy Barrie, after some time on the afternoon TV air, now has her own evening show on WNBW Wednesday nights at 8:15. It's an interview show

That intrepid sleuth of the comic strips, Dick Tracy, makes his television debut tonight at 8:30 on WMAL-TV. A film presentation, the series is expected to include the various characters associated with Tracy in the comic strips. Must have been a nice day in the studio the day they auditioned for B. O. Plenty.

Joey Adams, emcee of CBS' "Rate Your Mate" quiz, will substitute for Hal Block on the CBS-TV "What's My Line?" panel tonight at 9 (WTOP-TV).

The NBC television series scheduled for Wednesday nights starting October 4 now has the third man signed up. Comedian Danny Thomas is to be the third in the once-a-month series. Comedians Ed Wynn and Jimmie Durante were the first two signed. The fourth Wednesday of the month is still up in the air and may be used for a "new talent" show.

Your Best Bets If A-Bomb Falls

Betty Furness, often seen on television commercials loading laundry into the automatic washer, acquires her own weekly variety show tonight at 10 on WMAL-TV

What you can do in case you or those around you are injured in an atomic explosion will be shown in a new series of television programs starting tonight at 9:30 on WMAL-TV. "Atomic First Aid" will be conducted by Joe E. Aronoff, Assistant Director of Safety Service for the District Chapter of the Red Cross.

The nine important steps to take in case of atomic injury or other accident will be demonstrated on the first program and Aronoff will use a model to illustrate the first steps to be taken in the area of an atomic explosion.

Aronoff has served in safety service for many years and was in England during the blitz of World War II. This will be the first comprehensive series of TV shows to report on the new findings in the new field of safety in atomic bombings.

McMahon a Busy TV Performer

Ed McMahon, the bulbous-nosed clown whose ilehted proboscis and lettered wig open each week's performance on CBS-TV's gala circus review, "The Big Top" (WTOP-TV, Saturdays, 7 p. m.) is no stranger to television or circus life.

At the moment, he is the busiest TV performer in Philadelphia. He makes nine regular appearances each week on WCAU-TV, Philadelphia CBS-TV affiliate, where he's on the air a total of 5½ hours a week.

McMahon is Aunt Polly's mischievous nephew on a homemakers's program, the glib emcee of a musical variety, the wisecracking narrator of a series of old-time films, and on Saturday nights, after being chief clown on "The Big Top," he's the casual, music-minded disc jockey of "Of the Record."

Irrepressible Imogene Coca makes like Carmen Miranda for "Show of Shows," variety program she and Comedian Sid Caesar share with guests Saturday nights at 9 on WNBW

Ameche, Brewer In 'Holiday Hotel'

Don Ameche is this year's host on "Holiday Hotel" which returns tonight at 9 over WMAL-TV. With Ameche is Betty Brewer, singer who scored a tremendous personal success in last year's show; Choreographer June Graham who took over that job just before the show closed last summer, and Don Craig, formerly choral director with Fred Waring, who will lead his own octet.

The program will use the same format as it had last year when Edward Everett Horton was manager of the hotel. But this year Ameche, as owner of the hotel, will get involved in all the dramas and difficulties of the guests. Known, you might say renowned, for his movie portrayal of Alexander Graham Bell, Ameche has been a popular radio performer on the old Chase and Sanborn Hour, more recently on "The Bickersons" and just this past summer as summer substitute for Don McNeill on "The Breakfast Club." His past TV appearances have been as guest star.

Alan Young resumes his role of well-meaning young man who is always in trouble when the "Alan Young Show" returns to WTOP-TV tonight at 9

Broadcast of World Series To Be Most Expensive Yet

By C. E. Butterfield

NEW YORK (AP).—This year's broadcast of the World Series will be the most expensive yet.

Current estimates put at $1,500,000 the sum the sponsor, Gillette, will pay out to relay the October baseball classic on both radio and television. That's more than double the previous high.

Most of the extra cost is due to television. First, the price paid to baseball for the rights has been upped to $800,000, quite a jump from last year's $225,000. Furthermore, the TV network facilities to be set up will be greater, due to expanded coverage to about 60 stations. That will add at least $250,000 to the total depending on whether the series takes four or more days.

The amount going to radio, is considerably less. While still a goodly figure, it is about the same as in the past. The rights stay at $125,000, with a network of 600 radio stations to cost around $225,000.

MBS is carrying the radio, as usual, with TV stations of its affiliates in New York, Boston, and Chicago getting in on the video direct relay no matter what the network arrangement.

After five years with the same sponsor, the James Melton Sunday concert series comes to an end September 17. The time is to be turned over to the Sam Spade sponsor, who is dropping him in favor of a new detective series. . . . Further to bolster its fall schedule, NBC intends to retain at least three of its summer sustaining shows. These include the Charles Boyer dramas, the top secret spy story with Ilona Massey and Night Beat, detective yarn. They will get late evening spots.

FINAL ARRANGEMENTS for the telecast of the series show it will go over the most extensive network yet.

Expansion of relay facilities by the end of this month to 14 more cities will make the games available to a total of 45 cities in the East, the Midwest and the South over about 75 stations.

Added cities will take the transmission as far west as Minneapolis, Omaha and Kansas City and as far south as Jacksonville, Atlanta and Birmingham. Other additions include Ames and Davenport, Iowa; Rock Island, Ill.; Indianapolis and Bloomington, Ind.; Louisville, Ky., Greensboro and Charlotte, N. C. Another Southern city is Memphis, but it has had network service for some time.

Three TV networks will participate in the transmission. NBC, CBS and ABC, each have agreed to contribute $50,000 toward the $800,000 cost of the TV rights to the sponsor, Gillette.

Dumont declined to join in the pool telecast, expressing belief it was "unsound for networks to finance any advertiser's use of the Nation's entire television facilities to project the advertiser's sales message."

Besides the NBC, CBS and ABC units, TV stations owned by MBS affiliates in New York, Chicago and Boston also will be cut in. MBS as usual is carrying the radio relay to its full list of stations together with temporary expansions expected to bring the overall total to 600.

Dave Garroway of NBC, who recently resumed the Sunday night telecasts out of Chicago which have attracted so much attention because of the novel effects introduced, also has ended his radio vacation. He has a new schedule and sponsor, putting him on five times a week, 12:15 p. m. for Central, Mountain and Pacific zones and 1:15 for Eastern. He calls the show "Dial Dave Garroway." His telecast continued as "Garroway at Large."

Robert Montgomery . . . has resumed his weekly news commentary on ABC-WMAL Thursdays at 9:45 p. m.

Rendell Given ABC News Job in Tokyo

Richard Rendell, who has been on the news staff of WMAL for the past two years, has been named chief of the far eastern news staff of the American Broadcasting Company, with which WMAL is affiliated. Many of his news reports from the Korean front will be heard in Washington. He has left for Tokyo, where he will establish and maintain headquarters with the three free lance correspondents who have been broadcasting for ABC.

Rendell's regular 11-to-11:10 nightly newscasts over WMAL have been assumed taken over by Bryson Rash.

JOHNNY BRADFORD

Bradford Now Owns a Dog

JOHNNY BRADFORD, lately of the WNBW "Television Journal" and still more lately of an NBC after midnight radio show with Tony Romano and Ransom Sherman's TV show on NBC, is now in Hollywood readying a show for KLAC-TV.

He sends the word that he's acquired a bloodhound yclept Ingrid of Glen Dongen, to match his own doleful expression on the show. Bradford has been looking for a bloodhound ever since Marylin Himes (of WMAL-TV's "Tailwaggers" show) told him he had that hangdog bloodhound expression. But bloodhounds are scarce and Ingrid cost him $500 and took all this time to locate. He plans to sing such items as "Nancy With the Laughing Face" to the droop-jowled doggy. He thinks she'd be the greatest deadpan artist since Buster Keaton and Charles Butterworth—except for the competition she gets from Dagmar on the Jerry Lester show on NBC-TV.

The Hollywood show will be called "Johnny Bradford—This Guy for Hire," and will be modelled somewhat on the TV Journal he did here.

Tony Romano with whom Johnny did his radio show still makes recordings with Bradford and they still write music together. One of their latest, "If You Were My Girl," is doing rather well, the authors modestly admit.

Besides developing his own show, Bradford is building another one for KLAC-TV and hopes to be a TV "package" man, too. S. S.

Sullivan Signs Topflight Guests

Ed Sullivan has signed the following additional stars to appear on his CBS-TV "Toast of the Town" during the coming weeks (WTOP-TV, Sundays, 8 p. m.):

James Barton, stage and screen actor; Billy Eckstine, top singing favorite; Nanette Fabray, Broadway musical star; Nat "King" Cole of the famed King Cole Trio; and Carol Bruce, musical comedy star.

Frankie Laine, song stylist, and Victor Borge, pianist-satirist, headline the bill for tonight. Others previously announced for future bookings are: Margaret Truman, Pat O'Brien, Lauritz Melchoir, Mimi Benzell, Rudy Vallee, Tony and Sally De Marco, Reginald Gardiner, Gloria Swanson, George Raft, Leonard Warren, Sarah Churchill, Bert Lahr, Moira Shearer and Anna Maria Alberghetti.

In Show Business, Lying's 'Just Congenital'

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

"IN the theater, where lying is a sort of professional epidemic," says Dick Maney, "a truth-teller is looked upon as a heretic. I remember a producer coming out of a show of mine once—I mean, I was the press agent for the show—and he knew it was a flop . . . the balcony was just about to start pitching vegetables. Said the producer: 'Great play, isn't it?'.

"I looked him right in the eye and said: 'I don't think so, chum'—and you know what he did? He looked at me as if I had just slammed him in the teeth with a polo mallet!

"Of course, the lying isn't malicious—it's just congenital, like shaving or eating breakfast. It's just . . . the thing to do. Of course, there are rare exceptions. I remember Gilbert Miller reading a murderous panning of 'Harriet,' a play of his, and he looked up from the smoking review and said: 'You know . . . this critic is right.' And that time, I was the guy who almost keeled over at that sudden spasm of candor!"

DICK likes to sharpen a point with a well-turned phrase—a last-line device cherished among critics. In conversation, like a duelist, Dick prefers the cutting edge of a word or a phrase, instead of thundering or earthy oaths:

"Cursing shows a lack of imagination," says the man who called Billy Rose, his boss at the time, a "theurgist":

"Billy was always fascinated by words he did not understand—and he never forgets them once he looks them up. Ten years after I called him a theurgist, the word popped up in his column one day. Spelled right, too."

Uh, Mr. Maney, what does it mean? That word, theurgist.

"Means magician."

Oh.

SOMETIMES his "arsenic and old lace" style of writing backfires; an editor called him once to say: "Just read that story you sent us, Maney, and it'll make a fine spread in the Sunday edition . . . but just between us, whathahell does it mean?"

Under the rules of the game on Broadway, Maney can handle only six shows at a time—otherwise, he would have a monopoly. Among his clients have been "The Front Page," "The Little Foxes," "The Cocktail Party," and "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes"—looking at the list, you can learn nothing about his tastes; you can't even prove he prefers hits.

After so many years in the business, he has few heroes—but several heroines, among them, Tallulah Bankhead and Ethel Barrymore. He worships Miss Barrymore, more ardently than ever since the night backstage at "The Corn is Green," when he dropped in to say good night to her—he had been sitting on the stagedoor steps reading about a red-hot pennant race in which the Dodgers had lost a double-header to the Cubs. Firmly pushing the baseball tragedy out of his mind, he straightened his tie, patted his hair, and knocked on the door. Miss Barrymore. She bade him enter. Inside, she was scouring off the makeup, but still handsome, regal.

Majestically, she turned on her stool, and in the voice of a tragic queen, she said: "I see where the Bums blew two today, Dick!"

Maney insists that a man does not buy such gems even at a dime-a-tier's.

TICKETS FOR CRITICS pass through the fingers of press agents such as Dick Maney, king of his trade on Broadway. Gossip items, also whole articles and interviews are his business, too. "Sometimes I may use fancy words—like theurgist—but I never deal in fiction"

TV to Tap Pulitzer Prize Works

PULITZER PRIZE winning dramas, dramatic adaptations of other Pulitzer Prize winning material, and other material written by Pulitzer Prize authors, will be televised under the sponsorship of the Joseph Schlitz Brewing Co. starting October 6.

A full hour program, "Pulitzer Prize Playhouse" will be seen over the full ABC television network each Friday from 9 to 10 p. m., (WMAL-TV here.)

Leading stars of stage and screen will appear in the productions.

SPEAKING on behalf of the Pulitzer Prize Advisory Board of Columbia University which makes yearly recommendations for the awards, Dean Carl W. Ackerman said:

"'Pulitzer Prize Playhouse' on television can greatly increase the public's appreciation of the services of authors, journalists and composers to American culture and democratic citizenship . . .

"The faculty and alumni of the Columbia Graduate School of Journalism are heartened indeed, for this program will help to perpetuate and encourage fine literary craftsmanship and courageous journalistic enterprise.

"Over the years the prizes conceived and established by Joseph Pulitzer have helped encourage finer newspaper and literary work by both prize winners and aspirants. It is recognized throughout the country that a Pulitzer Prize is a most coveted laurel among newspapermen, authors and composers."

THE PULITZER Prizes were founded when the late Joseph Pulitzer made an agreement with the Trustees of Columbia University in 1903 to establish a School of Journalism, and in his will, which was probated in 1911, he provided for the Pulitzer Prizes.

Pulitzer authorized the yearly award of prizes in certain fields of journalistic and literary endeavor, with the selection of winners to be determined by an advisory board. It is these awards, the first of which was made in 1917, that are known today as the Pulitzer Prizes.

Lake Success Telecasts Put U. N. Sessions in the Home

NEW YORK (AP).—Telecasts of the United Nations Security Council meetings from Lake Success, Long Island, have brought the U. N. right into the American living room. At the same time they have produced a dramatic tenseness almost identical to the unfolding of a stage thriller.

Particularly has this been the case in the month just closed when Jakob A. Malik, Soviet delegate, returned to the council to serve his regular term as president.

Viewers had the closest of front row seats to Malik's maneuvering in the handling of the Korean question. They could watch first hand the counter moves by the British representative, Sir Gladwyn Jebb, and the American, Warren R. Austin, and others of the 11 Council members.

Closeups of the delegates enable direct checkups on the actions of these men as they make history.

For the telecasts, covering all Council meetings complete except where overtime sessions have run into the night hours, pool transmissions have been set up with NBC and CBS as the most active participants. The programs are relayed to all out-of-town stations desiring. This includes Washington, where the pictures are available to Government officials. Most telecasts start at 3 p. m. daylight.

While the Council sessions at times may become tedious due to the procedure requirements of both simultaneous and consecutive translations, enough happens at other times to keep the interest up. As a matter of fact, the translations often give the viewer a rest period.

The plan is to continue the TV schedule for the Council as well as the Assembly sesions whenever they are held.

Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Colman . . . they're returning to Halls of Ivy Wednesday at 8 p. m. on WRC-NBC

Area Rose Growers Setting Up Annual Potomac Show

By Katherine B. Pozer

ROSE GROWERS will have to look to their laurels this year at the Potomac Rose Show, for visitors will include members of the American Rose Society, which is holding its annual meeting at the time of the show. Plans for the exhibit, September 30 and October 1, are well under way and there is every promise that it will be Washington's largest rose show. Additional rooms at the National Museum will be used and the show will be national in scope.

The annual meeting of the rose society brings together most of America's topflight rosarians. This year they will spend nearly a week in meetings and in visits to famous rose gardens of the East. The Shoreham Hotel will be headquarters and there will be many talks on judging, soils, diseases and landscaping. A meeting open to the public will be held at which there will be discussions on rose growing by rosarians of fame.

Members will visit Beltsville, where the Potomac Rose Society has sponsored a garden for tests of rose diseases and control. After leaving Washington, members will visit the Robert Pyle Gardens at West Grove and the Dupont gardens at Kennett Square. Later they will visit Hershey, Pa., and Breeze Hill at Harrisburg, the gardens of the late Horace MacFarland. During the meetings, Robert Pyle will talk on the roses of Europe, from which he has recently returned.

THE AMERICAN Rose Society has done valuable service over a period of years in guiding rose growers, encouraging hybridizers and in standardizing rose shows so that prospective exhibitors will know in advance the general rules and outlines of rose exhibits in any section of the country. The gold bronze and silver medals of the society are highly prized by all fortunate enough to win them. These awards are offered by many clubs affiliated with the national organization at shows which are conducted according to the rules of the society. The rules carry the following points:

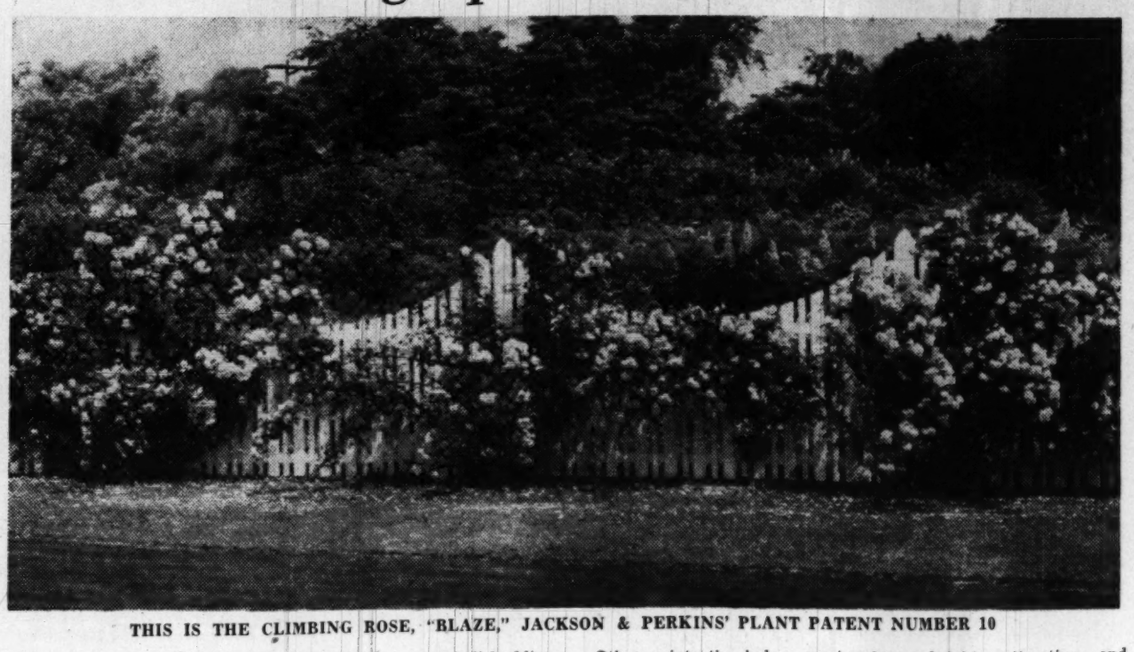
Rose shows where judging is based on a comparison of the approach to perfection of the individual variety.

Judges must disqualify exhibits that are not named (except in special classes for unnamed varieties), wrongly named or not worthy.

SPECIMEN blooms of teas, hybrid teas, hybrid perpetuals and other exhibition types must have been grown disbudded. Side buds will disqualify the bloom; evidence of very recent disbudding will be penalized at half the score of the stems. In other classes, polyanthas, hybrid polyanthas, floribundas, climbers, etc., naturally grown flowers may be shown without disbudding. (Many local shows are now having classes for "naturally grown" roses.)

At the time of judging, an exhibition rose should be in the most perfect phase of its possible beauty. Usually this is when the bloom is half to three-quarters open, depending upon variety. Buds are specimens less than one-third open.

In showing large-flowered climbers and ramblers, only one bloom lateral is admissible.



THIS IS THE CLIMBING ROSE, "BLAZE," JACKSON & PERKINS' PLANT PATENT NUMBER 10

Other points the judges must take in consideration are:

FORM. The exhibition rose form presumably includes sufficient gracefully shaped and symmetrically arranged petals, generally tending towards a high center and pleasing circular outline. In the case of polyantha and other clustered types, the shape of the inflorescence and the arrangement and spacing of the florets should be attractive.

SUBSTANCE. Refers to the quantity and quality of component parts of the petals and must be sufficient to give stability and durability of form, texture and finish.

COLOR. Should be clear, clean, bright, attractive and typical of the variety.

SIZE. Is of importance principally in that it should be in proportion to stem and foliage. Lack of proper proportion or balance, oversize or undersize, is a fault.

STEM. Should be adequate to hold bloom upright above the foliage without undue bending. A stem out of proportion to the flower, whether too heavy or over-long on the one hand, or too short or weak on the other is a fault.

FOLIAGE. Should be adequate in size for the stem and bloom. Its color should be clear and typical of the variety. Insect or disease injury is a fault as is unsightly spray residue.

Put That Extra Produce in the Freezer

By James H. Beattie

The home freezer is convenient and economical

THE POPULARITY of the home freezer continues to grow. The added experience of owners through another gardening season has given more proof that the freezer is a convenience and measure of economy. Naturally the freezer is most advantageous to those who have a surplus from the garden that would waste without this convenient method of storage; however many accomplish actual savings and enjoy the convenience of having food supplies readily available from the freezer by purchasing the supplies wholesale usually at greatly reduced prices.

Some fruits, peaches for example, do not reach their best quality until tree ripe. Many growers now cater to the requirements of those wanting tree-ripe fruit. In many cases it is possible to purchase the ripe fruit at a very low price. Tree ripened peaches packed in the freezer in syrup or sugar provide a mid-winter fresh fruit quality product. The same advantages are to be had from many other products.

Some of the best of the fruit and garden products adapted to storage by freezing will be available for several weeks. This is an excellent time to start this work while dealers' stocks of freezers and supplies are still available. Practically all owners of home freezers report excellent results in convenience and economy.

WHILE it is possible to construct a domestic-sized freezer by buying the parts, we believe it is usually better to purchase a factory-made product. The average housewife insists on the freezer being of the same finish as the range, refrigerator or ironer, something that would be difficult to match in a homemade job. The freezer is a long-time investment and it may be very important to have an outfit for which repairs will be available in future years. With the larger outfits, such as the walk-in jobs that have to be built in, only standard parts that are the product of an established manufacturer should be employed.

Don't buy too large a freezer. There is no point in having a freezer that is only partly filled. Besides, they are more economical to operate if kept practically full. For the average-sized family having a medium-sized garden, or who purchase supplies in moderate quantities, there is seldom need for a freezer having a capacity of over 10 to 12 cubic feet. Freezers are usually listed as having a capacity of 40 or more pounds of stored product for each cubic foot.

When buying a freezer one should be sure that it will go into the basement or wherever it is to be installed. Freezers are commonly listed as a little less than 30 inches wide but this does not always include the projecting hinges and door fasteners. Basements doors are commonly 32 inches wide but this is not the width of the opening in the frame because the door stops or the rabbet reduce this by almost an inch. Turns such as those at the bottom of outside entrance basement steps are another obstacle and the seriousness of this problem is in almost direct relation to the length of the freezer. It often happens that areaway walls and door frames have to be removed before a large freezer can be installed. This is an expensive operation that would have to be repeated when removing the freezer.

A COOL LOCATION such as the basement, as far as possible from the furnace, is desirable. Manufacturers always specify that the freezer be placed where there is free circulation of air, otherwise the compressor will run too much, using excessive amounts of electricity and give poor results. One local owner installed a large freezer in a garage where there was no outside ventilation. The compressor ran almost continually until this situation was corrected, afterward at infrequent intervals.

The larger-sized freezers, especially those of 10 cubic feet capacity or larger should usually have a separate electrical circuit direct from the main panel box. It is especially objectionable to have the freezer on a circuit with an ironer or other device that uses large amounts of electricity. An overloaded line is hard on the mechanism and costly in current.

Recent interviews with the owners of home freezers developed the fact that most of them consider the preparation of fruits and vegetables for freezing to be simpler and easier than canning. They also agree that the quality of the frozen products is very high, usually equal or nearly equal to the fresh product. All owners discount the prevalent idea that the preparation of products for freezing is a simple matter. Expensive containers and painstaking care are required but still it is simpler than canning. Both methods are needed because some products are not at all adapted to preservation by freezing.

BEST RESULTS with frozen fruits and vegetables have been reported for asparagus, cauliflower, sprouting broccoli, garden peas, lima beans, sweet corn, strawberries, raspberries and apple sauce. There are many others that might be added to this list but a well-stocked freezer with a good supply of these items certainly adds up to excellent living.

To many families the storage of meats, poultry and fish in the freezer is of even greater importance than the keeping of garden crops. Both have their place in the family economy.

Suburban and country families living on small farms have an excellent chance to grow poultry and even produces meat animals as well as fruits and vegetables for freezer storage. Certain freezer plants in this locality are prepared to dress poultry and meats and prepare them for storage in the home freezer.

Ashes Loosen Clay

Ashes of wood, soft coal and hard coal are all valuable to loosen heavy clay, but it is best to let soft coal ashes weather for a season, to get rid of toxic substances.

For Next Summer's Use

Time to Start That Compost Pile

By Alfred Putz

UNTIL WINTER sets in, garden refuse will become increasingly more plentiful, much to the delight of gardeners who realize the great value of compost. Yet there are many who pass this valuable material on to the trash collector, not realizing its worth. The most critical need of most garden soils today is humus. Garden refuse from healthy plants, with leaves, kitchen refuse and a little soil, will give a compost the like of which cannot be purchased anywhere.

Throwing the material in a pile then forgetting about it cannot qualify as composting. Everything possible should be done to give the plant tissues a chance to rot into a dark fluffy mass of humus.

The two main requirements are moisture and air—and just the right proportion of each. Only with a favorable balance of these two factors can the decay-inducing bacteria work at full capacity.

Where no well drained pit or inclosure of stones, bricks, cinder blocks or substantial boards is available, a retaining wall of upturned sod will do the job. As to the width, five feet is a practical measure. The length will depend upon the material the gardener can amass. Except for diseased plants and woody stems, everything the garden provides may be included.

THE FIRST STEP is to start the retaining wall in an out-of-the-way spot where the heap will not offend the eye. A shady place is preferred and that usually can be located behind some shrubs which also will hide it.

The refuse should be placed in layers not more than 5 inches deep after being trampled down. If dry, wet it well. For quicker decomposition and a richer compost sprinkle a little commercial compost stimulater over each layer before covering with two inches of soil.

A light sprinkling of lime over each soil layer also is good practice. Some of the soil may be provided by edging the garden beds. There is no need for this soil being rich. Even subsoil will do in an emergency.

Odds and ends of fertilizers and larger quantities which cannot be identified because the labels are lost also find good use on the compost heap. Do not let the pile grow higher than four feet before settling sets in and at all times leave a slight depression in the top to collect rain water. This reduces the need of watering to a minimum and if the hose has to be used it prevents the water from running off the sides.

There will be little change in the composition until after two or three months of rather warm weather. So do not count on using it until the following summer at the earliest. Meanwhile, it should be turned over at least once to aerate it.

Turning over is easiest where the pile has been placed so that there is an additional 6 feet at one end to which the material is moved with the spading fork without the gardener having to trek back and forth.

While making a compost heap is completely unrelated to planting bulbs, there is an interesting link. Most gardeners cannot get into the mood for planting spring-flowering bulbs until frost has destroyed the annuals where the bulbs are to bloom. That makes planting much later than is good for the bulbs. Sacrificing as much as a month of annual flowers seems like a tragedy, but is it?

THERE CAN BE no argument that the fall end of the blooming season does not offer the same splendor as its height. Of course, there are exceptions; some annuals are most colorful just before frost. Most of them, however, will begin to fail noticeably from now on. So why not gather courage and part with them now? Once the beds have been cleared and the bulbs planted in the made-over soil, the fresh earth itself will add a pleasing change to the garden picture.

In many cases the determination to plant bulbs in time does not require removal of all the annuals in a bed, anyhow. Group plantings now are the vogue and that gives the gardener a chance to enjoy a limited number of flowering plants right up to frost while the intervening spaces are planted to bulbs. That seems like a good compromise.

Once such bulbs as daffodils, tulips and hyacinths have been planted deeply for permanence, there will be no need in coming years to curtail the annual show.

Evergreen Shrubs Require Pruning

BLACKBURG, Va. (AP).—A. S. Beecher, Virginia Tech assistant extension horticulturist, said flowering evergreens should be pruned no later than September.

He advised, however, that for best results and assurance against frost damage the shrubs be pruned in August, as early as possible.

Evergreens, which have grown too large, should not be cut back until next spring. Beecher explained that evergreen lines which are pruned late do not have time to toughen before frost and are very susceptible to injury.

An Extra Portion

If you are growing flowers or vegetables for fall exhibition, an extra application of plant food will usually work wonders with them.

Shun Wet Bean Patch

Keep out of the bean patch when it is wet if you don't want rust.

Garden Club Activities

THE SEPTEMBER meeting of the Woodridge Garden Club will be held at Taft Junior High School, Quincy st. ne., on Monday at 8 p. m. The program, under the direction of Dr. Freeman Weiss, will include a review of recent flower shows and a question box to be answered by a panel of experts.

THE CHEVY CHASE, D. C., Garden Club will meet at the home of Mrs. Paul S. Anderson, 6319 Delaware st., Chevy Chase, on Monday at 1 p. m. Mrs. Elmer Higgins and Mrs. Lew Mohler will be assistant hostesses, and the president, Mrs. Christian C. Wohlgemuth, jr., will preside.

ALL ARE INVITED to visit the flower show to be held by the Blue Ridge Flower Club on Wednesday from 3 to 6 p. m. in the Parish Hall, Leeds Church, Hume, Va. Horticultural classes, arrangements, and an interclub class will be included, and a sweepstake prize will be awarded to the exhibitor receiving highest points.

THE NATIONAL Capital Dahlia Society will meet on Thursday, 8:15 p. m., in room 43 of the National Museum, 10th and Constitution ave. nw. The program will feature a showing of dahlias by the members with experts judging and explaining their techniques. Dr. J. L. Bowling will give an award for the best specimen miniature dahlia bloom.

EXHIBITORS at the Bethesda-Chevy Chase Harvest Show to be held September 17 at the Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School will vie for prizes and trophies to be awarded by various civic clubs and business organizations. There will be a top prize of a $25 United States Bond plus door prizes for the public.

Plant Food Helps

If you are growing flowers or vegetables for the fall exhibitions, an extra application of plant food will usually work wonders with them.

Really Soak Soil

Vegetables need 1 inch of water each week during warm weather. If rain fails to supply it, the gardener must. Don't sprinkle, but soak the soil.

Virginia Fair Opens Sept. 28

Richmond.—The 1950 Atlantic Exposition will feature an "electrical village" as a major attraction of this year's fair to open here September 28 for 10 full days of exhibits and entertainment, the Virginia Conservation Commission has announced.

The "electrical village" will occupy 15,000 square feet of the huge new commercial exhibits building erected last year. One half of the 100 by 300-foot all-metal structure will be devoted to showing the very latest in television, radio, air-conditioning, home and farm appliances.

Forests Offer Relief From Hay Fever

The forested mountain regions of New Hampshire are largely free from ragweed pollen, which is said to cause 90 percent of the suffering of hay fever addicts. Studies have been made at 35 stations by the State department of health, to determine the extent of ragweed plant growth and the amount of ragweed pollen in the air.

It was found that a large percentage of the land area of New Hampshire is at such an altitude that ragweed does not grow, and 81 percent of the total land area of the State is forest, in which ragweed does not grow.

Ragweed growths are small enough so that they can be controlled by the use of chemical sprays. This has been done along hundreds of miles of highway and in a number of towns.

Whistle Stopping

There Were Giants In Those Old Days

By Orval Hopkins

A NOTICE has come here whooping up the 1000 Islands Fall Fishing Festival, being held in upper New York State through October 14. A single line in parentheses says, "Special to Insert-name-of-paper."

Ah, this takes me back, this soaks me in nostalgia. I used to work on the Insert-name-of out West—that's the old Insert-name-of, of course. Son, there were giants in those days. I can remember our managing editor, "Nails" McTige, striding into the city room and snarling, "What do you lugs think this is, a weekly? This is the the Insert-name-of! And by Gad you lugs'll find it out or my name ain't—" He'd turn on his heel and stride out. Funny thing. I never saw McTige turn on anything but his heel.

I remember when our city editor, "Nosey" O'Grady, would get the police reporter on the phone and shout, "You tell that flatfooted chief of police he can't intimidate me! You tell him this is the Insert-name-of and that I mean to get that story. And I'm GONNA get it." He'd hang up and glare around the city room and everybody would shiver.

I remember the supreme thrill of answering the phone one day and hearing the voice of our star reporter, "Scoop" Scope. "Hello, Buddy," he rasped. "This is 'Scoop.' Let me talk to O'Grady. Tell him I got a story thats gonna crack this town wide open! Tell him this one's gonna put the Insert-name-of on the map!"

Oh, we had 'em in those days. And don't forget that 1000 Islands Fall Fishing Festival.

OLD STURBRIDGE VILLAGE, Sturbridge, Mass., announces that its third annual fall foliage camera tour day will be held October 8. Professional models from Boston, as well as local people, will be dressed in eighteenth century costumes and will pose in the buildings and on the grounds of the museum . . . The Senator at Atlantic City reports that advance reservations augur one of the most active seasons of the year this fall and early winter. James E. Reed, publicity director, says the management credits the demand to the increasing popularity of its Sun Room on the roof and to the increased number of recreational facilities now available to guests.

THE GLIDDEN tour for old and aging automobiles will begin this year at Lake Placid, N. Y., tomorrow. First day's run takes the company of more than 100 cars to Montreal. Second day the route goes to Nananoque, Ontario, and the third and final day's run will take the party to Rochester for a banquet and general, I assume, wassail.

A BULLETIN from America Express says: "The travel industry is breathing easier and is less apprehensive of immediate restrictions than at any time since the start of the Korean conflict. Federal officials have not enacted restrictions either on domestic or foreign travel. While the defense program is snowballing, domestic travel officials believe that unless trouble breaks out on new fronts green lights are ahead for late fall and winter.

"Autumn European travel is being planned at high level. Although the Korean situation has affected overseas travel, late summer and early fall transAtlantic bookings are holding up fairly well on major ship and air lines. More vacationists have sailed for Europe aboard Cunard ships in the last eight weeks than in the corresponding period of last year, reports the Cunard Line. TransAtlantic airlines for September and October are now booked from 10 to 15 percent above the same period of last year. A portion of this air increase is attributed to the off-season rates effective September 1 and the larger number of weekly European flights scheduled last season."

Pirates Just Making Movie

Hollywood (AP). — Catalina Island tourists really opened their eyes with an Chinese junk followed by three sampans and a battered sloop sailed into Avalon Bay, manned by a bloodthirsty looking crew in pirate attire. Then a sixth vessel, a strictly modern power cruiser, hove into view. Cameras were mounted on the bow. Faces fell on shore. Just another movie.

New Rules Govern Highway Painting

The Virginia travel council reports that new policies governing repainting of traffic lines have been put into effect. These will reduce traffic congestion and largely eliminate any difficulty in keeping off the freshly painted lines.

Highway workmen now operate under these rules:

Painting is not to be done on holidays, weekends, or in the vicinity of celebrations or other gatherings.

Painting is to be discontinued during peak traffic hours near cities and industrial centers.

Painting is to be done as much as practicable on clear, dry days to speed drying.

When long grades are painted on routes where truck traffic is heavy, frequent "skips" should be made to allow fast-moving traffic to pass.

Boulder Dam Tourists Near 2-Million Mark

Las Vegas, Nev.—Officials at nearby Boulder Dam and adjacent Lake Mead won't be surprised if visiting tourists reach the two million mark in 1950.

Month after month, since the first of the year, attendance records are being smashed, with summer visitors flocking in from every compass point to see the combined public utility and sightseeing wonder.

It is one of the most popular sidetrips for vacationers in this desert sea resort, according to the chamber of commerce.

Antelope are on the increase in New Mexico and in some sections are tame enough to stand for photographs.

No Census Kicks

Las Vegas, Nev.—Unlike many other cities, there were no disappointments or complaints here when the census taker announced 1950 population figures.

The chamber of commerce took care of that possibility a year previously when it publicly guessed the Las Vegas population at 25,000.

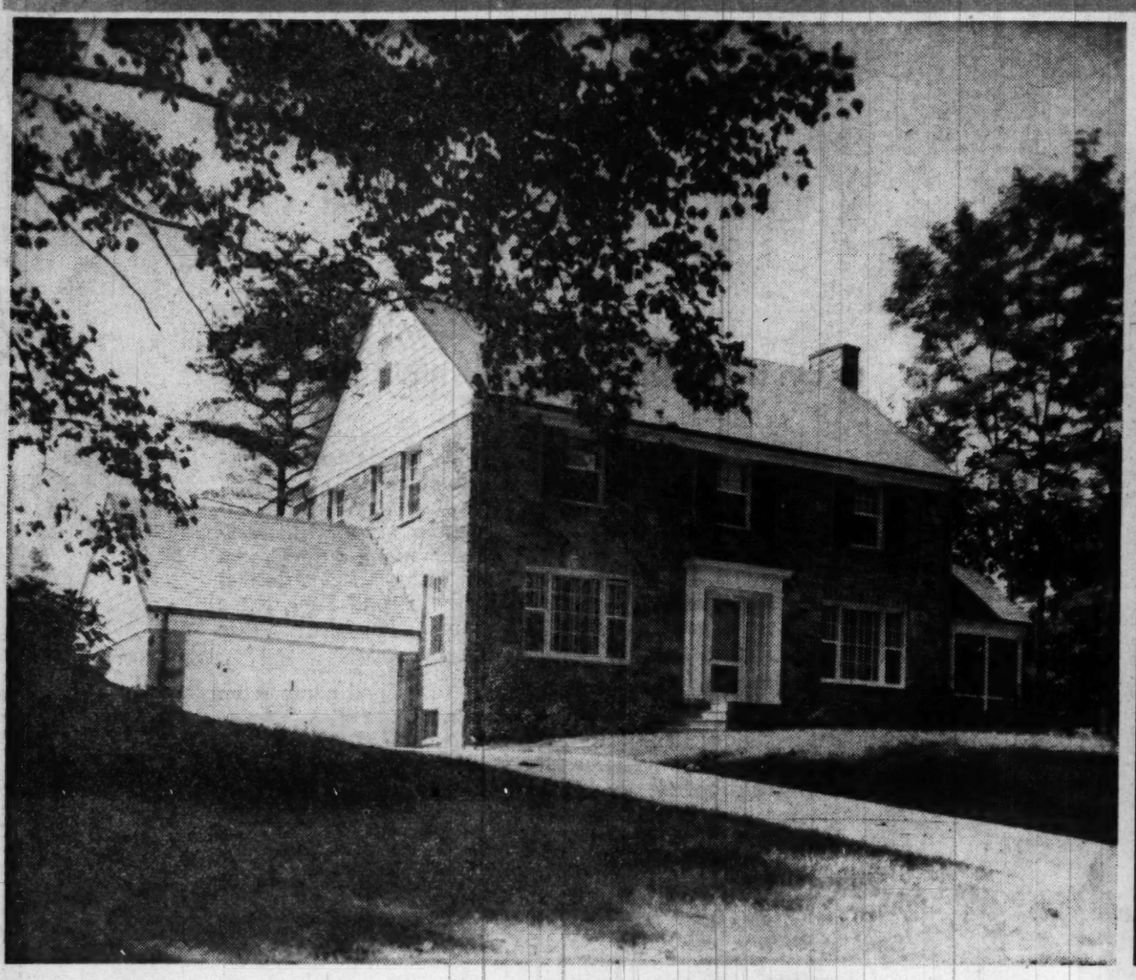
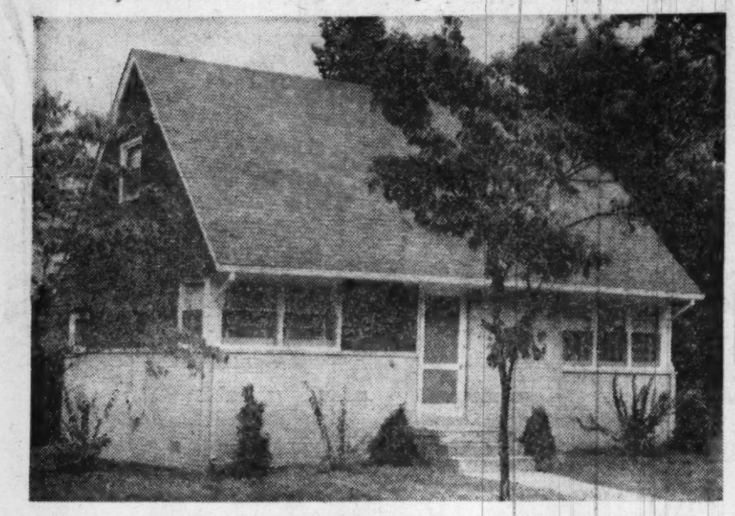
Here They Are! 22 'Homes of '50' Open Doors Today



Here's a dignified design for living—the "Home of '50" built by the W. C. & A. N. Miller Development Co. at 2834 Foxhall rd. nw. Furnishings by Mayer & Co. are a perfect complement to its modified Pennsylvania colonial styling

Dreaming of a modern, rambling, one-story house? Take a look at the $29,750 "Home of '50" built at 3439 George Mason dr., Arlington, by Atlantic States Construction Corp. Berkey Properties, Inc., presents it



This 1½-story home is built to grow. It has two bedrooms on the first floor, room for two others on the expansible second floor. Built by R. H. Best, Inc., it is priced at $13,950. All-electric kitchen is a feature. The house is at 10201 Procter st., McDonald Knolls, Silver Spring

First house finished, decorated, and ready for the show was the Georgetown "Home of '50." Lois Wannan, home furnishings coordinator for Woodward & Lothrop, gives the unusual wall grouping in the guest room a last-minute straightening. The tailored spread has an Old Red background, contrasting with walls of Kingfisher Blue. Builder of this house is John R. de Sibour

English and colonial styling meet in this home built by M. T. Broyhill & Sons at 4501 26th st. N., Arlington. Room sizes are unusually large throughout. A "living porch" opens off the living room; basement has a recreation room. Biggs Antique Co., Inc., has furnished it

Month-Long Exhibition Is Free

Wide Range in Price and Design

By Robert P. Jordan

THE doors of 22 "Homes of 1950" swing open at noon today.

Thus will the greatest housing exhibition ever staged in this section of the country get under way—a month-long, carefully planned presentation based on the idea that the best in homes built this year is well worth your inspection.

The big show is free.

From noon today through October 7, daily and Sunday, you're invited to visit the homes. You'll find them in various parts of the District, nearby Maryland and Virginia. (See map on page 3 of this section.) Seven of them are completely furnished.

These homes, each approved by a committee of experts for quality of construction and excellence of design, are representative of the finest being built anywhere at the century's halfway point. They exemplify architectural styles ranging from colonial to modern. They cost from $9990 to $53,500.

And they are typical of the best on the market this year in Greater Washington.

The homes will be open, after today, from 2 p. m. until dark on week days. Saturday and Sunday visiting hours are from 10 a. m. to dark.

Sponsors of the exhibition are 22 building firms, eight furniture stores and The Washington Post. The production they have set up is your opportunity to get a first-hand look at the latest developments in housing and furnishings.

The exhibition has been planned to appeal to everyone. No matter what kind of a house you want, chances are you'll find that one or more of the "Homes of '50" meets your requirements in size, in price, in design.

If you like the modern one-story, ranch-type house, you've got a wide choice. If you prefer colonial-style homes, there are several open to your inspection. If you are interested in the expansible 1½-story house, the semidetached house, the prefabricated house—well, just look 'em over.

But you don't have to be a potential home buyer to find the exhibition worthwhile. Take a look anyway. You're more than likely to come away from it with a wealth of ideas for remodeling your present house, or redecorating it.

The furnished houses, for example, will thrill any homemaker. They've been beautifully decorated in keeping with their design, and with furniture and materials that are available now in stores. Lucia Brown, who writes of this phase of the "Homes of '50" immediately below, reports that decorators have worked late at night to make their presentation the best possible.

To insure the high quality of the exhibit houses, Edward R. Carr, builder, John M. Walton, architect, and Frank J. Luchs, realtor, spent hours

A Homemaker's Dreams Come True

Fashions in Furnishings

By Lucia Brown

HERE it is again! A chance to see seven homes completely decorated by experts with the newest and best in home furnishings.

Most of us—women, anyway—decorate homes in our mind's eye. We dream and plan, imagining how color schemes will work out and how furniture look when it's in place.

In the "Homes of '50" you'll find ample food for dreams, served up by talented decorators, in beautiful and visible form. Each house is complete, from the front hall to the last bedroom upstairs. Each has a different setting, located as they are in various sections of Greater Washington. And each has its own distinctive style of interior, covering a wide range of fashions in furnishings.

A pocket-edition guidebook to the interiors may be helpful in planning your visits today or in the month to come. Here, in brief, is how the homes look:

Light and lovely in its color scheme and traditional in its furnishings is the Somerset, Md., house built by O. F. Smith & Bros. and furnished by the William E. Miller Furniture Co. J. Harold Gooding was the decorator.

Pale green walls and a gray sculptured rug in the L-shaped living room form a background for furnishings in shades of rose and deep green. Draperies have a chartreuse, rose and eggplant pattern against a green background. Living room furniture—and that in the dining corner—is dark mahogany.

Johnny Appleseed, that legendary character who planted apples throughout the pioneer Midwest, is featured in the small library. One wall is covered with a gay print in red, green and white showing Johnny at work. Draperies are of fabric in exactly the same pattern.

Eighteenth century furniture is used for the most part in the Wesley Heights house built by W. C. and A. N. Miller and furnished by Mayer & Co., with S. Tibbs Chichester as decorator. Each bedroom, however, features a different style of furniture.

The master bedroom has eighteenth century mahogany, with four-poster bed. Another bedroom is in white French furniture, another in Early American pine, and still another in silver elm modern. Colors are all very modern—softly muted or bright to suit the decor of the particular room.

In the living room of this house, soft grays are used with bright color accents—turquoise, red and silver. The dining room has lovely Chinese wallpaper and white draperies with Chinese cornices. The library is distinguished by dark red walls.

(See BROWN, Page 16)

This is a corner of the gracious dining room of the "Home of '50" furnished by the Biggs Antique Company and built by M. T. Broyhill in Arlington. Above the brandy board is a mahogany and gold leaf reproduction of a mirror that belonged to Martha Washington. The table is Chippendale, crotch-rimmed and inlaid with boxwood medallions. Chairs are Duncan Phyfe with a modern touch—sponge rubber upholstery!

Touches of colonial styling distinguish this contemporary-style home constructed by O. F. Smith & Bros. at 5528 Uppingham st. in Somerset, Md. It has a knotty pine-paneled club room in the basement, three bedrooms, two baths. Furnishings are by the William E. Miller Co., Inc.

Newest Furniture Combines Traditional and Modern Styles

ARE MODERN and traditional styles converging? Furniture designers are pondering this question, together with architects, commercial designers, and artists.

The answer seems to be "yes" as far as furniture is concerned.

Modern furniture is less severe in line than formerly. Traditional furniture is being scaled down in size and equipped with divided drawers and extra shelves—all in the interest of functional convenience.

Modern designers are rediscovering the beauty possible through the imaginative treatment and variety of the cabinet woods used. Their designs, of course, are contemporary—but Hepplewhite, too, knew the charm of a burnished piece of mahogany accented by lighter colored woods.

Along with mahogany, today's artisans use walnut and oak, which they finish in various ways to bring out their full beauty. These, they combine with woods of different textures, stressing the grain by strategic cutting, and using, in some instances, pigmented lacquer to bring out the pattern.

Chicago designer Edward J. Wormley, for instance, combines woods of different textures in a magazine rack of pale birch and "untreated" walnut. By "untreated" Wormley means the wood just as it is cut, with sap streaks untouched and other seeming blemishes much in evidence.

In the magazine rack, which is a five-tired affair, the birch frame and walnut trays contrast sharply in both texture and hue. The finish, which consists of four coats of clear lacquer, serves to emphasize the grain and sap streaks in the walnut and to enhance the soft sheen of the finish.

Another creation is a high mahogany chest with nine graduated drawers which are canted to eliminate hardware. The horizontal lines and progressive spacing of this shutter-like arrangement is the only decoration. Nor is any other decoration necessary.

For the wood finish on this piece, Wormley has used only coats of clear lacquer. As a result, the piece is in the rosy tone of natural mahogany.

While this lack of affectation in wood finishes is new, it is also so fundamental that it lends a certain timelessness to furniture, whether modern or traditional in form.

Architect's Tips:

Low-Cost Homes Can Have Advanced Design Standards

LOW-COST HOMES having the advanced design standards found in more expensive dwellings are possible with the exercise of ingenuity and know-how, according to a Phoenix, Ariz., building firm.

The firm's architect lists these features as cost savers:

"No plaster. Four by six on clear span ceiling joist with 1x8 jointed plank cedar ceiling. (Cost is less than plaster.)

"Cedar 1x8 on walls, except where wallboard is papered. Cedar is actually No. 2, but reselected for use on all exposed portions. Cost is $120 per M instead of about $180. Savings $100 per house.

"Exterior 4x8x6 pumice block, raked joints on both sides, exterior wall painted on both sides.

"No bearing partitions. One small roof truss. Heating unit complete with duct, costs $227. Built-up interior doors of 1x8 cedar plank. Only flush doors in 2 bedrooms, bath and kitchen.

"Stock steel cabinets and sink. Factory glazed steel sash—$50 savings. This sash is of a formed, lightweight steel without cranks. Cost $112 per home, including glazing, screens and hardware.

"Bathroom wall covered with 5x5 aluminum tile 4 to 6 feet high, applied on wallboard. Twenty-two electric outlets, which is minimum but ample. Minimum use of light fixtures to keep cost down. Centralized plumbing. One soil stack; minimum use of vent-stacks."

'All-American Quality'

Looks Like the Cape Cod House Is Here to Stay

Cape Cod and the house it gave America both hold major roles in the current Nation-wide building boom.

New buildings are mushrooming along the 67-mile length of Massachusetts' coastal playground. In spite of the greatest construction activity of its history, however, Cape Cod still takes pride in the originals of the cottage which caught the interest of home-lovers across a continent.

These originals have set the pattern for thousands of small, new houses—3000 in one Massachusetts development alone. Settling on the land from Maine to California and Duluth to New Orleans, the trim Cape Cods have an all-American quality which may well be the secret of their success.

A MERE 75 years after the Pilgrims first touched soil of the New World at the Cape's tip in 1620, the Cape Cod cottage was an established part of the New England scene. Although reminiscent of the farm homes in England, it was a distinctly American creation, developed by the first settlers in answer to climatic, material, and labor problems.

Its basic design was simple, comfortable, and expandable. It consisted of a rectangular building a story and a half high, set close to the ground, and free of porches and other architectural embellishments distasteful to the Puritan nature.

It could start small—as a "half house" or "three-quarter house"—and grow to a "full house" with the increase in size and means of a family.

IT WAS, as Thoreau said, a "sober-looking" house, but it was also snug, sturdy, and beautiful in its proportions. A "full house" was distinguished by the position of the front door, centered on the long side and flanked by two windows.

The dominant feature was a huge chimney with three fireplaces—two small ones for the parlor and master bedroom on the front and a big one for the combination kitchen, dining and living room on the back.

Although the house style seemed ideal for New England, it did not spread rapidly across the country until the 1920s. Then, in the exploitation of Cape Cod as a summer resort, promoters recognized its charm and economy.

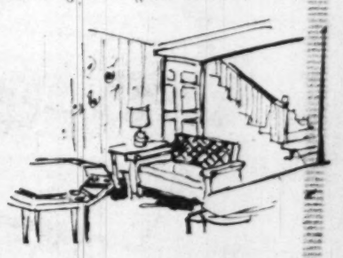
We want you to see what engaging things happen, when our clever coordinators dip deep into House & Garden colors. Discover how very hospitable, and 1950, English Regency design furnishings can be. We've mixed them, of course, with other periods, other "nationalities" in furniture and accents . . . because we believe that's the way a home reflects its owner's tastes. In the drawing room, for instance, with fine Cocheo and Beacon Hill pieces, there's a Louis XVI barometer and distinguished modern lamps by Paul Hansen and Ables Wasserburg. And a surprise color . . . H & G's Mustard, color seasoning we're certain you'll enjoy for its freshness. Come early . . . and browse.

In the dining room, Mustard blends with Cream and Antique Red . . . black lacquered table, mahogany chairs with red damask seats, mahogany and satinwood commode. James Lees' Bramble broadloom on the floor.

In the master bedroom and bath, Willow Green is the theme. Canopy and dust ruffle of the tester bed are striped in Nasturtium and Willow Green. Mahogany Mr. and Mrs. dresser and night tables.

Kling Cherry in the guest room harmonizes with Porcelain Blue. Cherry Red document print and English brasses are imaginative grace notes.



The recreation room is welcoming Forest Green and Pebble Beige, furnished with friendly Habitant Pine.

New Building Costs Rise On Horizon

By Sam Dawson

NEW YORK.—Another rise in building costs is shaping up, and shortages of a number of materials are foreseen until winter slows the record-smashing building boom.

Cement prices are rising again, after holding steady for nearly a year. Lumber prices, already inflated by the home-building spree, went up again after the Korean outbreak foreshadowed increased demand through military construction.

Price lists on hardware and fittings are under pressure from rising prices on copper, lead, zinc, and nickel.

Wage boosts in the plants of building material suppliers have increased costs, and demands for pay increases in other plants is boiling up as the cost of living rises.

Cement plants serving the St. Louis, Kansas City and Rocky Mountain areas raised prices generally the first of this month. Two cement companies in the east—The Alpha Portland Cement Co. and the Pennsylvania-Dixie Cement Co.—are raising prices October 1 by 10 cents a barrel in bulk and 12 cents a barrel in paper bags. Their present bulk price for a barrel of cement weighing 376 pounds net is $2.40 at the plants. The two-cent extra alike on bagged cement is credited to a 10-percent price increase on paper bags set for October 1.

MEANWHILE, the demand for most paper products is at such a high level that mills are voluntarily imposing allocation systems. In the case of cement, rising material costs, particularly for coal, and higher wages granted cement workers at many plants recently have more to do with the cement price boost than the currently short supplies, industry spokesmen say.

Shortages are attributed to the unprecedented and unexpected demand for cement to power the record building boom. However, production has been stepped up now and the industry says it can meet fourth quarter demands.

Contractors in the Philadelphia area say cement supplies are particularly short there because of large amounts being used to rush construction on the Eastern extension of the Pennsylvania Turnpike.

The United States Department of Commerce sees other reasons, too. A shortage of railroad cars has caused scarcities of building materials in some localities, it says. And "work stoppages," especially in cement plants, have cut production at a crucial time," it adds.

The Department says that in general building materials will be scarce until cold weather slows down the building pace. If builders don't start buying more than they actually need, material suppliers should be able through their current stepped-up production to bring supplies into balance with demand late this year.

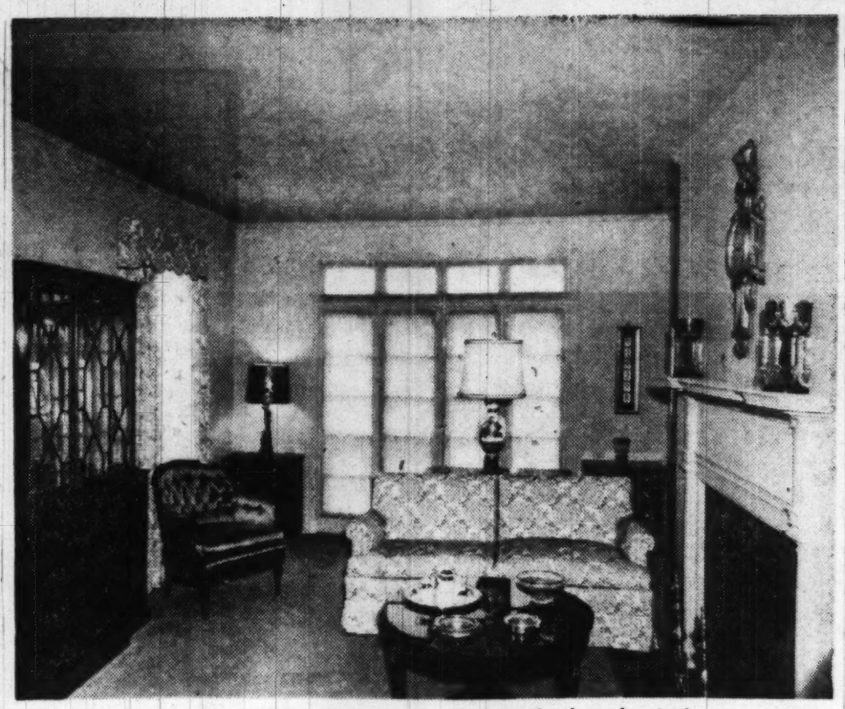
The more pressing shortages, the department says, are in cement, brick and gypsum board products.

Lumber production this year will be the highest since 1946 and sufficient to meet the year's building demands, despite some shortages earlier.

Builders have used more unglazed clay brick so far this year than produced. But this drain on stocks is being offset now by increased output.

Concrete reinforcing bars also were used in greater quantity than produced, putting a tight squeeze on stocks.

The Department also notes that the construction industry uses about 14 percent of total steel production, but this year, "automotive uses gained at the expense of construction."



This Georgetown drawing room is in the "Home of '50" built by John R. de Sibour and furnished by Woodward and Lothrop. Walls and carpet are in old gold, while the same shade mingles with other colors in draperies and upholstery fabric. An antique barometer hangs over the mantel, flanked by girondoles in ruby glass

This exclusive and restricted community-within-a-community was created in its entirety by M. T. Broyhill & Sons, thus eliminating, for residents, the extravagant middleman's development charges common to most such homesites. The tract for Country Club View, one of the most beautiful in America, was purchased by M. T. British to Guard Qutaibi

ADEN, Aden Protectorate, (AP)—A British fortress is now under construction near Al Hamra, near Sumair, seat of the sultan of the state of Qutaibi, Arab news agency reported. The agency said the fortress will be garrisoned by about 250 troops and construction is being carried out with the approval of the Aden government. Warring tribesmen have caused frequent trouble in this area in the past.

Farm Life Eased

Farmers are not far behind their city cousins in equipping their places with automatic devices ranging from toasters and trimmers to thermostats and television. More than 100,000 farm families have installed thermostatic controlled heating equipment recently.

Age Is Creeping Up on Half of America's Houses

Housing studies show that 51 percent of this country's 43 million homes are at least 30 years old.

Here are a few tell-tale symptoms of old age:

Slow running water from bathtub, sink and tub faucets; drafts and cold floors; worn-out looking bathroom despite periodic decoration jobs; floor boards that seem to breathe dirt and dust; preparation of meals in kitchen seems unduly long and arduous.

Inventor Invents Nearly Everything

Racine, Wis.—(AP)—If necessity is the mother of invention, then Albert J. Dremel has many needs. He owns patents on 55 devices used in the home, office and shop. Dremel, 62, has invented home appliances, electric phonograph motors, electric clippers and small power tools.

His first important invention was a widely used wringer with a special fast-opening safety device. In 1935, Dremel designed the "Moto-Tool." It is a small grinder used by home craftsmen and hobbyists. His newest invention is an electric eraser. The machine was created for architects, accountants and other whose work requires pinpoint erasing.

Ranch-Type Houses

The convenience of one-floor living combined with the principles of climate control are important factors in the popularity of ranch-type houses, says John E. Haines, vice president of Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. Zone control of heating provides comfort regulation by utilizing sun's warmth in winter and minimizing it in summer, according to Haines.

Greenland is almost entirely covered with ice up to a mile and a half thick.

WHAT'RE THEY FOR?—Why, for protecting housekeeping hands. The featherweight mittens are made of natural latex. The material is so soft and pliable it clings to the fingers, allowing freedom for work. Six colors are available.

MENDING liquid for fabrics eliminates the need for needle and thread. Patches remain flexible but strong. The mender is colorless, washable and heatproof.

PLATFORM on wheels will prove a valuable back saver to housewives and handymen alike. The triangular shaped dolly is padded with sponge rubber and has ball bearing swivel casters. It will hold up to 300 pounds.

FLEXIBLE gold plated chain with a screw-on ball at each end is a simple holder that will take a dozen keys.

ADHESIVE fixtures that attach to walls without screws or nails are ideal for use on tile, glass, metal and stone surfaces as well as wood and plaster. They can be easily removed without damaging the wall but while attached are as strong as any nailed bracket. Included in the line are towel bars, hooks for weights from 1 to 40 pounds, spice racks, mirrors and kitchen pegs.

LIQUID soap in an attractive plastic bar-shaped dispenser is sanitary and easy to use. By gently rotating the bar in the palm of the hand, just the right amount of cream is released. Flobar comes in a variety of packages—one for travel is in a plastic case.

TELEPHONE note papers come in a round clip of little paper discs to fasten over the number plate of the phone. A hook at the side holds a pencil.

Most of the above items are not yet on the market. For names and addresses of manufacturers—and stores when we have them—send this coupon and a 3c stamp to the Herald Tribune Home Institute, 230 West 41st st., New York 18, N. Y.

Knowledge of asbestos was lost after the fall of the Roman Empire and the mineral was not rediscovered until 1868.

SWING-DOWN shelf to make high storage more accessible has been worked out by a concern that devised collapsible metal brackets and a wide metal handle. You supply the shelf, which can be any length but should be 10 inches wide.

Under-$4000 Incomes Buy Most Homes

FOR THE PAST four years, more than half of all the new non-farm houses built have been purchased by families with incomes of less than $4000 a year, according to C. B. Sweet, president of the National Retail Lumber Dealers Association.

"Economies put into effect by materials dealers and builders, plus special effort to design and construct homes within the reach of families with limited budgets, made this unusual record possible," Sweet said.

Analysis of official statistics compiled by the FHA shows that the median income of families obtaining mortgage insurance on new homes has been running about $3880 and that median valuation of the homes insured has been $8500 in recent months. Nearly one-fourth of the new homes insured by FHA have been valued at less than $7000, and an even larger percentage of houses financed by other means fall into the same low-priced range.

"The gradual adaptation of mass production techniques to small and medium size housing developments, and the growing use of time-saving equipment for materials handling in dealers' yards, have contributed importantly to the industry's ability to turn out low-priced modern dwellings in a time when prices of all commodities have been affected by the general inflationary trend.

"The average cost of the 5 million new homes provided by private enterprise since the end of World War II would have been markedly lower had it not been for the insistent public demand for extra home equipment in the finished house."

Cleanliness Is Only Real Home Deodorizer

By N. S. Haseltine

SCIENCE has finally recognized the greatest testing device for man since he first learned to test things by taste.

It's the nose.

Elmer R. Weaver, chief of the gas chemistry section, National Bureau of Standards here, pays scientific respect to the human nose in an NBS circular on Control of Odors.

Science, with all its gadgets, hasn't come up with any gas analyzer comparable to the nose, Weaver said.

"The apparatus is nearly always in position to obtain the sample of greatest immediate interest to the analyst; sampling is automatic; the analysis is made and the results reported almost instantly," he wrote.

No other method of analysis, he explained, is capable of distinguishing between and correctly reporting so large a variety of chemical substances by a single operation, smelling.

WEAVER'S TRIBUTE to the human nose introduces a circular designed to answer the most common questions asked the bureau on how to control odors. And, more particularly, how to eliminate those odors you don't like.

One of the most frequently asked questions concerns the value of chlorophyl in deodorization. Chlorophyl is the green coloring matter of plants, and has frequently been hailed as nature's own deodorant. Such claims wrinkle the edges of his own gas analyzer, Weaver said.

"We have no reason whatever to believe that chlorophyl ever has anything to do with deodorization," he states flatly in the Government pamphlet.

Since the circular was written, new claims have been advanced that chlorophyl, taken internally, reduces body odor without hindering perspiration, and takes the osis out of halitosis.

"The circular's statement still stands," declared Weaver, adding that his section hadn't tested chlorophyl's internal effects.

"The 'sweet breath of kine' may be poetic, but it's not true," said the scientist. "Cows, who eat loads of green grass, have mighty bad breath." And the hippopotamus at the zoo, the world's greatest chlorophyl consumer, has one of the worst cases of halitosis I ever met."

"CONTROL OF ODORS" points out that household smells are far more difficult to control than odors produced by industrial plants. In industry, the source is known and control can be planned in advance. In the house, odors assail one from every side. The bad ones must be eliminated, and the circular recommends "cleansing and the intelligent use of ventilation" as the best means.

"The destruction of household odors either by burning or by chemical action is usually both impracticable and unnecessary," it states. "In the household, the use of absorbents is also usually impracticable.

The "best solution" of the odor problem, the pamphlet points out, is to locate the odor's source and remove that. For those who don't like the smell of moth preventatives made of naphthelene and para-dichloro-benzene, for instance, the smell experts recommend "more effective and much less odorous sprays of DDT or similar insecticides."

TO THOSE who would destroy household odors by incinerating them, say by a constantly burning candle flame, the odor testers say it takes too long. They point out that even in an airtight living room it would take 100 candles 12 hours to "contact" the room's volume of air.

Activated carbon, as a remover of household odors, gets the pinched nose gesture from the NBS testers. The carbon does not absorb much odor before it becomes a source of odor itself, they said.

Tackling the matter of airborne deodorants, the scientists put them in two classes. In one, the action is to make the nose insensible to odor; the other adds odors of its own which "mask' more offensive ones.

Those which attack the nose were classed as anesthetics and irritants. The irritants, which include ozone and chlorine, were particularly attacked by the NBS testers as "comparable to sunburn, which may go unnoticed during actual exposure but the effects of which develop and subside with painful slowness."

Ozone generators for "deodorizing" households were hit by Weaver as potentially dangerous, since "ozone in even small concentrations is a dangerous substance."

Concerning those who use ozone, Weaver wrote: "If they noticed such effects as headaches and burning eyes, they probably ascribed them to hayfever or colds in the head.

"They almost certainly would not have attributed to ozone breathed on Friday the fact that the steak seemed tasteless on Sunday."

WEAVER HAS a word, too, for persons who complain that the natural products of today don't smell as sweet as those of yesteryear. He mentioned particularly the memories of apples, and maple syrup.

Actually, said Weaver, food flavors cannot have changed greatly. But the sense of smell, like its companion senses of sight and hearing, does become blunted with advancing age.

It's in the masking of odors that man finds the best—and sometimes worst—way to get around smells. The perfumer offers a pleasant approach, but his products are not always wisely used. And man sometimes comes up with his own attempts at "counter-odorization" with sad results—like the tippler who chews onions to drown out the smell of alcohol on his breath, and then chews tobacco and smokes cigarettes to nullify the onion stench.

The net result is that his breath smells like that of a drunk who eats onions, chews tobacco and smokes cigarettes.

This masking of odors has a good household illustration. What would be the effect, asks Weaver, of mingling in uniform mixture such delicious aromas as those of browned pork chops, coffee, buttered peas, strawberry jam, celery, peach pie and vanilla ice cream, with a little pleasantly scented soap?

"The experiment is tried several million times a day," answers Weaver, "and the result is always dishwater."

Women Go a Little Wild Over Clashing Fabrics

By Vivian Brown

(P) Newsfeature Writer

MANY of us would like to give our homes a lift this fall—perhaps a new color bath for the walls and attractive drapery and slipcover accents at windows and chairs.

We think about it, and then we hesitate before splurging. How can we select wisely this time, so the job doesn't have to be done again for a long time?

One decorating expert, Mrs. Donald Price, vice president of the Greeff wallpaper and fabric house, has some excellent suggestions for the girl who finds herself in this dilemma, and for the prospective bride who is furnishing her home for the first time. Says she:

"If you want to plan a pretty home, you must decide on your color scheme for each room before you invest even in a dish towel.

"The trouble with most women is they buy a fabric that attracts the eye without planning its use in advance so that it will be harmonious with other fabrics and the entire color scheme of the room."

Mrs. Price believes that women either go "wild with patterned fabrics that clash with each other, or they are so afraid of color that their homes look drab.

Here is a yardstick for tyros suggested by Mrs. Price. If you are furnishing your home for the first time or redecorating it, these tips will come in handy:

1. First select color of paint or wallpaper in each room. If you are not an expert at decorating, paint your living room, do not wallpaper it. Never use wallpaper where the room is very cut up with lots of windows and doors.

2. Next select colors to be used at windows and on furniture, whether slipcovers or upholstery fabrics. A good guide is this: if you like chintz, put it at the windows. Then take a color or two from the pattern and match it to plain fabrics to be used on chairs. Limit the colors to two when chintz is being used.

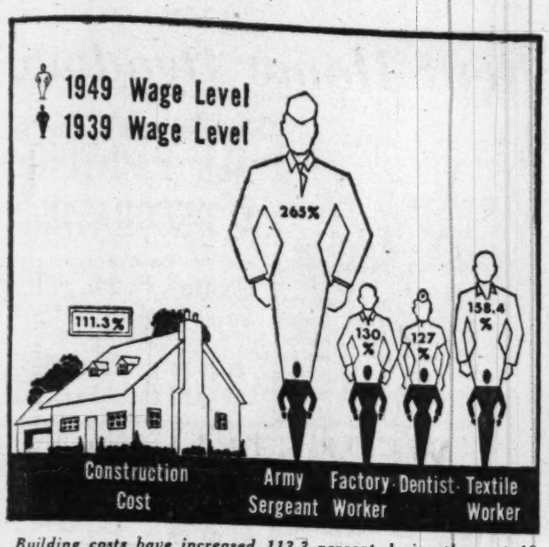
3. If draperies are plain, you can use a stripe with color and design in tapestry, chintz or linen on one chair.

4. Don't use the same textured fabrics throughout the room. Even in different colors there is nothing more monotonous than an all nubby fabric or an all shiny smooth fabric.

5. If you have children, use a glazed chintz as it does not show the soil as easily as other fabrics. If you decide to use nubby textures, get a mixture of cotton and nylon or any other mixture that has luster so that it will not show the soil.

6. If your ceilings are low, do not use a valance. Run curtains up to the ceiling to give the room the appearance of more height. Cover the curtainrod with drapery fabric for a new touch. Radiator pipes can be hidden by clever draping.

7. If your room is small, darker paints will make it appear larger. If wallpaper is selected for a small room, make sure the pattern is a flowing one, and not a set one such as a series of posies or other pattern that will grow tiresome after a while.



Building costs have increased 113.3 percent during the past 10 years—but wages in some industries and classifications have increased even more. It's easier, says the National Association of Home Builders, for the average worker in the manufacturing industries to buy a home now, for instance. His pay check is up 139 percent over his 1939 pay envelope

Lower Than 1940

Increased Earnings, Income Cut Comparative House Cost

NEW houses cost less today, in relation to earnings and income, than ever before, a recent survey indicates.

The $5000 house of 1940 now costs $9950, according to the Boeckh index used by the Department of Commerce, which shows a 99 percent increase in residential construction costs since 1940.

But the $9950 house is much more easily afforded.

In 1940, the manufacturing worker earned $25.20 a week, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. It took him 238 work weeks to buy the $5000 house.

In 1950, more than 11 million manufacturing workers earn an average of $56.20 a week. It takes them only 177 work weeks to buy the $9950 house.

Another large group of workers with increased earnings are those in the building trades. In 1940, the building worker averaged $31.70 a week, and today earns $70.27 a week. The house that cost him 157 work weeks in 1940 today costs only 141 work weeks.

Average income in general (per capita income after taxes) has gone up more than 127 per cent since 1940, according to Department of Commerce figures. This, compared with the 99 percent increase in construction costs, reveals better than a 28 percent advantage for all buyers generally in purchasing today's house, as compared to 1940.

Garden Surpluses Can Be Stored in Vegetable Cellar

STORAGE of garden surpluses presents a problem which can be solved readily with only a small investment.

An ideal place for root crops, potatoes and leafy vegetables is the basement or utility room. Choose a corner, 6 feet square or larger, and having a window for ventilation.

The partition walls can be a 2-by-4-inch framework covered inside and outside with hardboard. Space between the studs should be filled with insulating blanket if the basement is too warm.

Cover the storeroom overhead with hardboard panels and place an insulation blanket between the joints.

The basement window can be adjusted to serve as a ventilator by replacing one glass pane with a small hinged cover. Remove another pane and fit a wooden duct into the opening, extending it almost to the floor.

Air circulation and temperature then can be regulated by adjusting the door and window openings.

Some garden crops that can be stored successfully in the "vegetable cellar" are beets, carrots, turnips and winter radishes. Late plantings should be pulled or dug in late fall. All but one-quarter inch of the tops are trimmed off. They should not be washed. Pack them in boxes or baskets in loose, moist sand or fine moist soil.

Potatoes in Slatted Bins

POTATOES from late plantings should be placed in slatted bins for ventilation and should not be covered.

In digging celery, kale, Chinese cabbage, endive or leeks, leave some soil on their roots and set them as close together as possible. Place them in boxes of soil which should be watered around the roots often enough to prevent wilting; keep leaves and stems dry.

This is an excellent place also for storing apples and pears.

Squash and pumpkins are harvested for storage as they mature. Three or four inches of stem must be left on, and these vegetables should be handled carefully to avoid injury. Varieties with thick, hard shells keep best. Sweet potatoes may be stored in crates. They also should be handled carefully.

By installing shelves, the "vegetable cellar" also will serve as a storage place for home canned fruits and other garden produce.

Since Vitrolite structural glass will not burn and is not affected by hot grease, it is frequently used as a protective wall paneling behind kitchen stoves.

Stone Cutter Carves Out a Hobby

Los Angeles (AP)— By day, Peter Zeolla fashions fireplaces of marble for the homes of the wealthy. By night the 52-year-old stone cutter relaxes with a hobby—chipping stone. His idea of resting is to fetch his tools and chisel delicate designs on a rough slab of marble or onyx. Handmade ashtrays, bookends and lamp stands are his specialty.

These Changing Times

Edmonton, Alberta (AP).—Steel girders didn't move as fast to the job when they were building the MacDonald Hotel here 38 years ago as they are moving today toward the hotel's 300-room extension. Joseph Smith had a hand in both jobs. Today he is moving the steel by truck from the railway yard—38 years ago he hauled all of it with horses and oxen.

It takes time to build a "Home of '50." They worked right up to the gun on the Jonathan Woodner Co. model house, as you can see. When you stroll through, you'll note a fireplace that takes up nearly an entire living room wall—and a lot of other features. Presented by Stanley R. Rowland Co., the home is 1½ miles past Seven Corners, in Fairfax County, on Lee blvd.

States Push Conservation

Chicago—(AP).—States are giving increased attention to conserving their natural resources, the Council of State Governments reports. It cites some of the actions of recent State Legislatures. Wyoming put $750,000 and a five-man board to work against grasshoppers. South Carolina established a new state water pollution control authority. Virgina set up commissions to supervise oil and gas wells and to regulate oyster fishing.

United States Cities Fight Smoke

Chicago (AP).—Scores of cities are taking steps to sweep excess smoke out of their skies.

"More than 200 municipalities in the United States have adopted smoke control ordinances," reports the American Municipal Association. "In general, these ordinances prohibit emission of dense smoke of more than a few minutes duration."

Garages Require Planning for Maximum Use

A GOOD garage requires planning, the Housing and Home Finance Agency points out, particularly if it is to be used as a storage area for the home.

The agency says that car space should be wide enough to permit opening of car doors inside the garage. Minimum width for this purpose is about 10 feet.

The garage should be long enough to permit a person to walk around the car with the garage door closed. Such clearance, according to the agency, requires at least 6 inches in front and about 18 inches in the rear. For most cars, a depth of 20 feet would be necessary.

Ceilings should be at least 7½ feet from the floor, HHFA says. The Federal Housing Administration usually specifies a minimum garage width of 9½ feet and a length of 19 feet.

Home Art Gallery Is a Fine Room Brightener

WALL DRAMA . . . Pictures and mirror are perfectly blended to lend interest in wall background

SOMETIMES all that is needed to bring warmth to a tired old room is some pictures.

Often people avoid hanging pictures because they can't afford old masters. Many museums offer delightful prints of old or modern masterpieces. Properly framed, these can add much charm to a room.

In selecting anything to hang on the wall—mirrors, brackets, pictures, flower holders—you must first consider placing and spacing.

Before you select anything for a particular area, give considerable thought to what would look pretty in the space. You might like a grouping of four pictures, or perhaps one picture would do the trick. For the same area on opposite sides of the fireplace you will need pictures balanced but not necessarily the same size.

As long as you fill approximately the same area on either side it makes no difference whether you use one picture or several.

You don't have to be an art critic to select effective pictures, but don't settle for mediocre ones just because you can't afford fine paintings. Excellent prints of landscapes, seascapes and portraits are available.

WHEN using a group of pictures, be sure they are compatible. You wouldn't want to put a print of Boticelli's "Birth of Venus" next to a Grant Wood landscape. Usually it is a good idea to keep portrait heads together, and incidentally several colored prints of famous portraits make a delightful grouping in a traditional room.

Picture frames should never be ornate. In a room decorated in French style, you can use a bit more gilt and baroque in your frames. But frames should never be so eye-catching that they detract from the picture. If you own a very good painting, an impressive frame may complement it beautifully. But the average print should have a simpler frame.

The fact that you are not selecting fussy frames does not mean that you should buy the cheapest frames you can find.

It is not an easy matter to select pictures to go over wallpaper, particularly if the pattern is large. If you like pictures, please do not paper your entire living room. Paint at least one wall so that you can add some wall interest later. If you already have wallpapered a room, perhaps mirrors will give accent to the walls.

Except on a stairway, do not hang pictures in step fashion—the most amateurish way of achieving a design. A large picture should not be hung over a small table. A small picture should not be put over a divan.

If you use large pictures, be sure that colors do not clash with upholstery and drapery fabrics.

Better Training:

Apprentice Plumbers Get New Textbook

NEW and better training for apprentices in the plumbing industry is being developed through efforts of the National Association of Master Plumbers and the United Association of Journeymen and Apprentices of the Plumbing and Pipe Fitting Industry.

The result will provide the industry with a supply of well-trained labor resulting from a comprehensive training program. To the public it will mean better workmanship and lower costs resulting from greater output per man hour.

Nucleus of the program is a seven-volume textbook titled "Plumbing Apprentice Training." The textbook was prepared under the direction of a joint committee of master plumbers and journeymen.

The committee's goal was to give the plumbing industry an outstanding educational medium for the promotion of Nation-wide standardization in the training of apprentices.

Outstanding feature of the text is its method of instruction. Wordy descriptive matter has been eliminated. Averaging three photographs or drawings to a page, the textbook consists of thought-provoking questions, the answers to which are not found in the book but only in classroom discussion.

Classroom question-and-answer meetings are planned with sessions conducted by instructors familiar with all phases of plumbing.

Controls Lifted In San Diego and Greensboro, N. C.

HOUSING EXPEDITER TIGHE E. WOODS has ended Federal rent control in San Diego, Calif., and in Greensboro, N. C., on the basis of local option decontrol resolutions adopted by their local governing bodies.

Since San Diego represents the major portion of the defense rental area in which it is located, unincorporated portions of the area also were decontrolled, as provided by the rent law.

At the same time, Woods decontrolled the remaining incorporated places in the area. Thus, no portions of San Diego County remain under rent control.

The Greensboro decontrol affects the city only.

$3600-$4800 Earners are Top Home Buyers

HOW MUCH family income did it take to buy the new houses produced last year?

Federal Housing Administration statistics indicate that families with incomes between $3600 and $4800 a year made up the largest group buying new homes in 1949.

The next largest group of new home buyers was that of families with incomes of less than $3600. Less than 15 percent of the new houses were bought by families with incomes of $6000 or over.

FHA figures for the first half of 1949 show that 37.5 percent of single-family home purchasers under Section 203 had annual incomes in the $3600-$4800 bracket.

THE TREND to greater production of low cost housing for both low and middle income groups is shown by the fact that 68 percent, or more than two-thirds, of all the FHA single-family insured houses in 1949 were bought by families with income below $4800.

Here, according to FHA figures, is the percentage of all houses purchased under FHA standard financing by various income groups in the first six months of 1949:

30.5 percent bought by families with incomes under $3600.

37.5 percent bought by families with incomes $3600-$4800.

17.3 percent bought by families with incomes $4800-$6000.

14.7 percent bought by families with incomes $6000 and over.

Autos to Feel Supply Pinch In Few Months

DETROIT, Sept. 9.—The Nation's mobilization program eventually will affect motor output, but few persons in the industry know just when.

Right now indications are it will be several months at least before manpower and materials shortages cut into civilian car and truck production. Few vehicle manufacturers have any hard and fast contracts for armament production; few have even "letters of intent," the preliminary indication of forthcoming contracts.

But while the car makers themselves may lack contracts, many of their suppliers have them. This is what will create the eventual shortage of materials. Armed service inductions and the transfer of key men to arms and mobilization work will bring about the manpower scarcity.

The tank contract recently awarded General Motor's Cadillac motor division is virtually the only major armament task so far assigned to the auto manufacturers. It will be several months before tanks begin to roll from the plant turned over to Cadillac in Cleveland.

Meanwhile the industry is going ahead with the biggest civilian production program in its history. Recently increased wage scales at General Motors, Ford, Chrysler, Packard, Hudson and some other units appear to have assured labor peace within most of the industry's own plants.

If work stoppages can be avoided in the factories of important suppliers, close to seven million cars and trucks will be built this year. Already this year approximately 5,450,000 vehicles have been assembled in the United States.

poring over the plans and specifications of the homes.

No Corners Cut

THEY studied blueprints closely to determine that no corners had been cut; that each house, in its own price field, offered a maximum of value. They have approved 22 attractive, well planned, livable homes.

Consequently, you'll be able to find out pretty much what the housing dollar can buy on the market these days in Greater Washington.

The map on Page 3 of this section shows the location of each home and gives directions to get to it. Also listed are the nearest bus and streetcar routes and the prices of the houses.

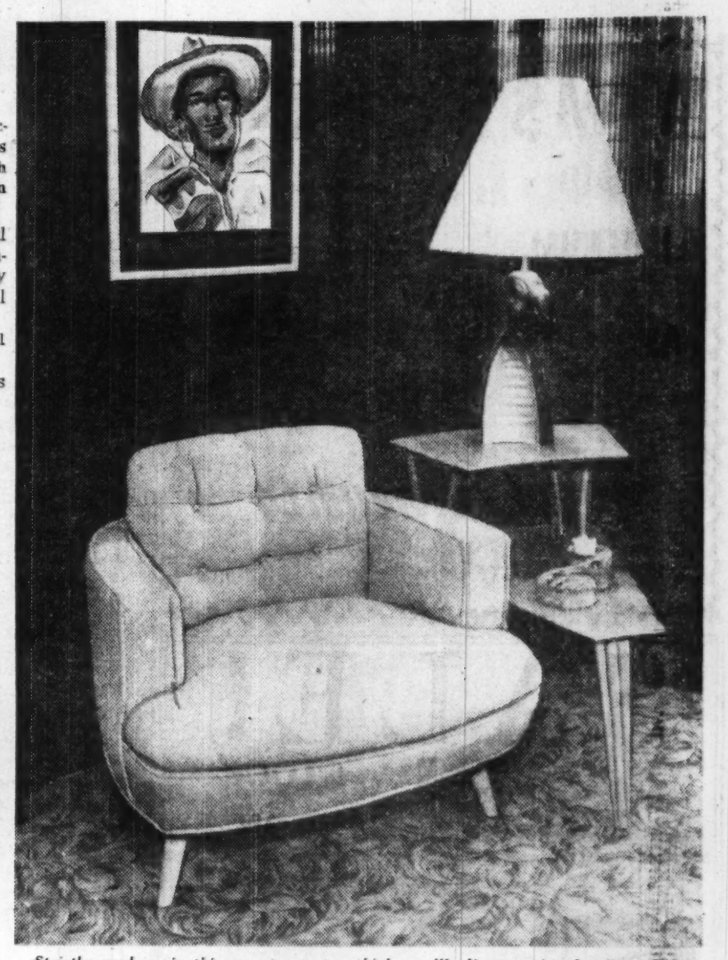
As a further aid in locating the homes, directional signs have been posted in prominent places in the vicinity of each one. When you approach one of the model houses, you'll spot a large sign on its lawn identifying it as a "Home of 1950."

Guides will be stationed at each house. They'll show you through, point out features, go into construction details, answer any questions you may have. Representatives of furniture dealers will be present at the decorated homes.

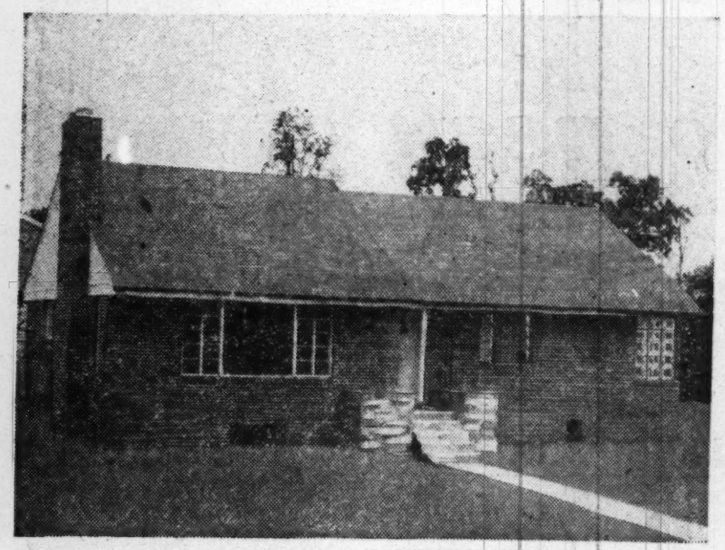
There it is—months of planning and work all pointed to one end: 12 o'clock noon today.

Everything's all set. Sponsors of the "Homes of '50" hope you like it.

WALTON LUCHS CARR



Strictly modern is this smart corner which you'll discover in the "Home of '50" furnished by Milton J. Rossler, Inc., and built by Twin-Brook, Inc., in Rockville, Md. The chubby chair is solid comfort on a small scale, upholstered in chartreuse. The abstract ceramic lamp is chartreuse and forest green, the table of "step-wedge" design is blond mahogany



Master bedroom with bath, fireplaces in basement and living room, separate dining room—these features are incorporated in this modern, one-story, $28,950 home built at 1500 Northgate rd. nw. by George P. Mandes. Sigler & Co. presents it

A Pocket Guide to Interiors

English Regency furniture—high style for fall—is used in the "Hope of '50" in Georgetown. This gem of a house is furnished by Woodward and Lothrop. The builder is John R. de Sibour, the architecture typically Georgetown. Mrs. Lois Wannan was in charge of the decorating.

In the drawing room, carpeted and papered in an old gold shade, are such lovely things as a wing chair copied from one in the Metropolitan Museum of Art, a black lacquer chinoisere (or breakfront) lined in red, and a coffee table with a black marble top.

Woods and finishes are used in interesting variety in the house—mahogany, black lacquer, satinwood, fruitwood, smoked mirror and ormolu.

Treasures in authentic antique reproductions are featured in the "Home of '50" in Arlington, built by M. T. Broyhill and furnished by the Biggs Antique Co. The spacious living room of this 2-story Colonial house has a red Chippendale sofa and mahogany breakfront, a wing chair upholstered in gold hand-block linen of Chinese design, and other beautiful pieces. Walls and velvet carpet are gray, draperies the same gold linen as the chair.

Upstairs in the master bedroom, you'll see reproductions of furniture owned by two different Presidents. The chest is a copy of one of Thomas Jefferson's, the poster bed a duplicate of that of President Tyler.

In Annandale, Va., the pre-fabricated house built by Reliance Homes, Inc., has been most attractively furnished on a budget by Frank Michelbach, Inc., of Alexandria. H. S. Van Eckhardt, the decorator, has kept cost in line with the price of the house—only $9990—without sacrificing good looks.

Blonde mahogany furniture including a television set, is used in the living room. One interesting pieces is a red "lazy boy" chair, which will tilt to any desired angle for solid comfort. Carpet and wall paper are gray, the latter with a faint plaid design.

Modern Mode

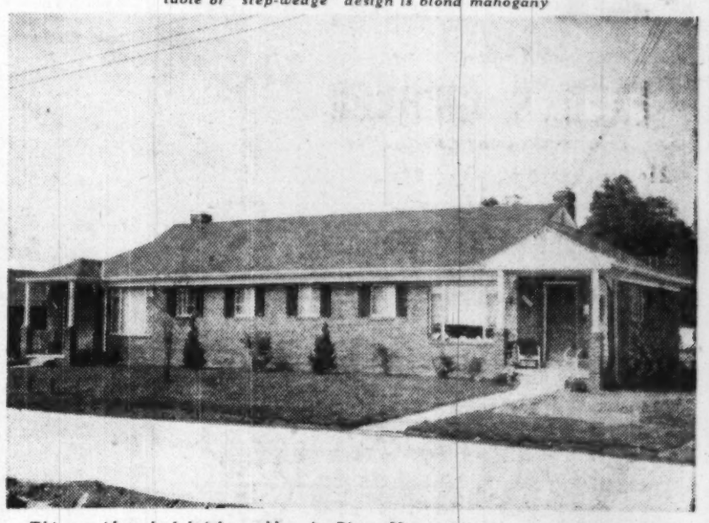
A MODERN one-story house, built by Jonathan Woodner Co., is the one that Peerless Modern House chose for decorating. Located in Fairfax County, it is in style well suited to the smart, utilitarian furniture selected by Victor Inoff from the store's contemporary lines.

Pieces from the "Planner Group" designed by Paul McCobb are featured. These include units—benches, shelves, cabinets, banks of drawers—that can be assembled in various ways to fill available wall space and the needs of the home owner. Completing this elastic group are chairs and other pieces of furniture in blonde birch and black lacquer.

Also done in the modern manner is the ranch-type house in Rockville, Md., furnished by Milton Rossler, Inc. Builder of this three-bedroom home is Twin-Brooks, Inc.

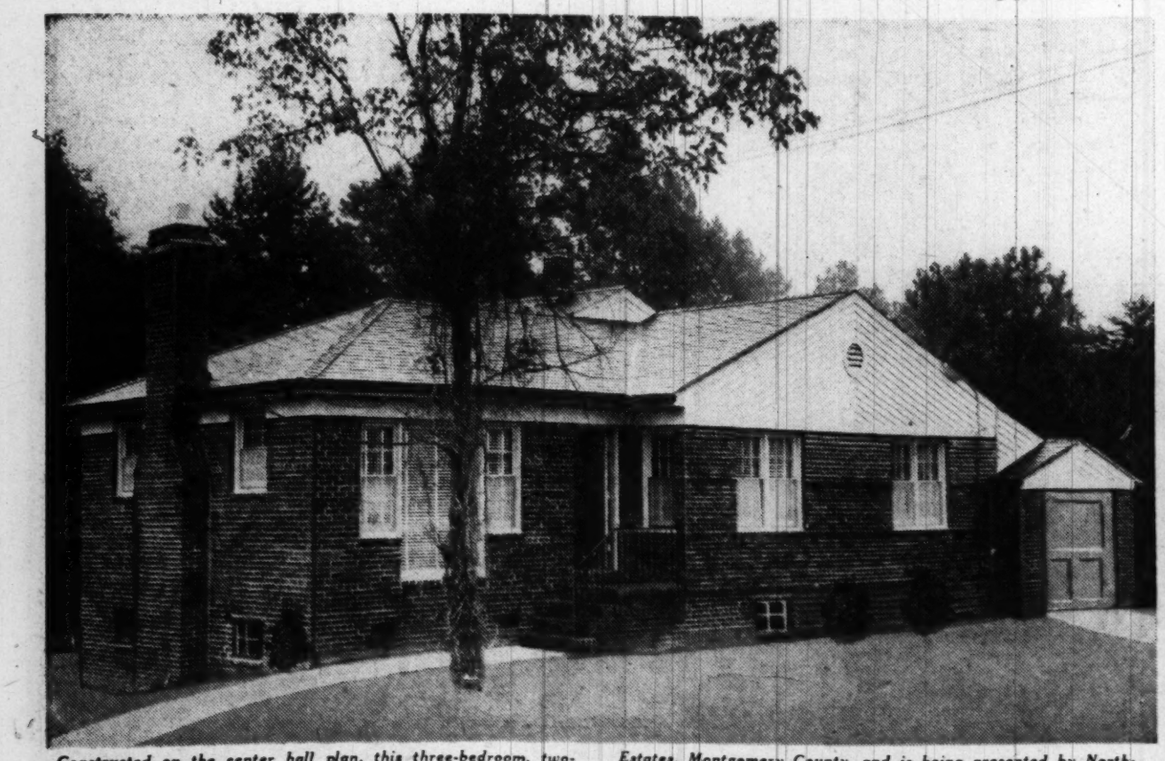
Moderately priced furniture was selected, Arthur Rossler told us, in order to keep price in line with the cost of the small, livable house. The furniture is light in scale, with a contrast of ebony and blonde woods in the living room.

A ranch-type house in Woodside Park, Md., opened for the show as an unfurnished home, will be decorated shortly by the P. J. Nee Co. Construction difficulties delayed its completion and decoration, but you'll probably be able to see it with furnishings by next weekend. Beitzell Construction Co. is the builder.

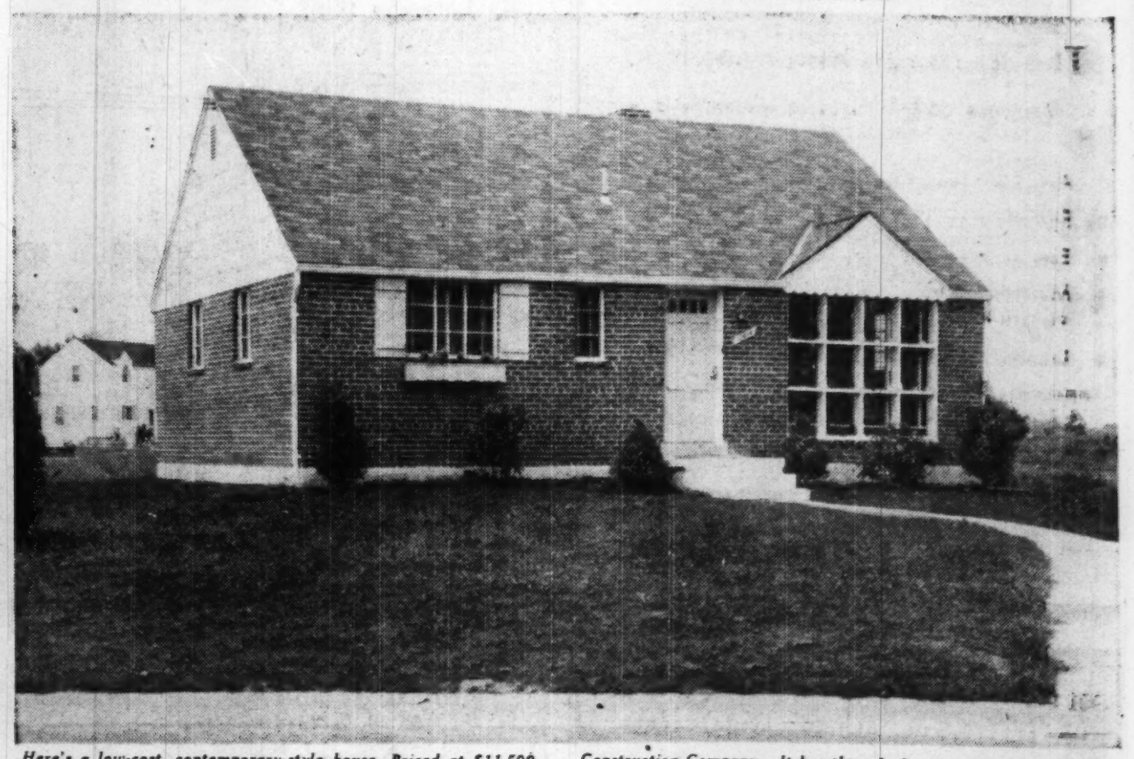


This semidetached brick rambler, in Riggs Manor Estates near Ager and Riggs rds., Prince Georges County, has two large bedrooms, fireplace in living room, picture windows. Erected by Master Builders, Inc., it's presented by Frederick Real Estate. Price, $13,250

What's a kitchen without a girl in it? She's Linda Harper, of Alexandria, a model. The kitchen is a feature of the one-story semidetached house constructed by Master Builders, Inc.



Constructed on the center hall plan, this three-bedroom, two-bath rambler was built by David Solomon, Inc., in Locust Hills Estates, Montgomery County, and is being presented by Northwest Realty Co. Price ranges from $27,000 to $29,250



Here's a low-cost, contemporary-style house. Priced at $11,500, it was constructed by the Brookville Homes Corp. of Gelman Construction Company. It has three bedrooms, detached garage. The home is located in the 13200 block of Georgia ave.

This corner features Modern furniture designed by Paul McCobb. You'll see it if you visit the Fairfax County Home of '50, built by Jonathan Woodner and furnished by Peerless Modern. The cabinets are in natural birch, with sliding doors in green. The wide, comfortable chair has tweed upholstery. This furniture is designed to be fitted into rooms in unit assemblies

Picture Windows Ease Eyestrain

CONTRARY to general belief, large window areas which let in the maximum amount of light do not result in glare and eyestrain.

Repeated tests by experts in the field of lighting and good vision show that eyestrain frequently is caused by sharp contrasts of light and dark areas within a room which has small or "average" windows.

Large windows offer relief from eyestrain because they encourage occupants of a room to change their focus from close to distant views.

One way to keep rays of the summer sun from entering rooms with large picture-windows is to train ivy or other long-leafed vines along the roof overhang, thus providing cool summer shade.

Mother Gets a Swimming Pool

Atlanta.—(AP).—Like many of the rest of us, Mrs. Lewis Higgins wanted a swimming pool in her back yard. And, like many of us, she didn't have much money. But Mrs. Higgins has her pool. It cost $15.

The pool is 15x7 feet and of wading depth for the use of her children. The $15 went for sand and cement and for waterproof paint. She used discarded lumber for forms and discarded pipe for a drain. The work she did herself, with some help from her husband.

Chinese Reds Object to Tree Cutting

HONGKONG. (AP).—The Chinese Communist government has told the Chinese people they can't cut trees along railroad lines anymore. The order was issued, a report here said, when the Peiping government learned that the Chinese had been cutting down trees for fuel. Don't cut the trees, the Communist government said, because they are needed to prevent soil erosion and to beautify the tracks. It didn't say what to do about the fuel shortage.

Angry Bees Pollinating Alien Fields

ROCKY FORD, Colo., Sept. 9 (AP). Approximately 75 million California honey bees hauled from the coast in a single truckload are stomping sullenly about the alfalfa blooms north of here.

The bees were brought to the Buckeye Hill District to pollinate some 1000 acres of alfalfa.

And that's what they're doing. But they don't seem at all tickled at the idea.

Bob Chase, who drove the bee truck from Oxnard, Calif., a likeable, slightly plump-looking fellow (he was stung at least a dozen times) says the bees were brought eastward in unscreened hives. Their colonies became mixed.

This produced a buzzing civil-war brand of rumpus that lasted all the way from Oxnard and into the alfalfa fields. Leaders of each hive worked at the business of giving strays from other hives the old heave-ho.

Now the family problem seems settled; but the general disposition of the bees is less than good. They have dive-bombed Chase repeatedly, attacked a score of field hands, and occasionally buzz to impressive altitudes for dogfights with one another.

Proud Owner

THIS fall, the pollination chores done, the honey bees will be returned to regular quarters in California's Ojai district in the foothills about 20 miles east of Ventura. Their owners, the Biggers Honey Co., get as much good out of the deal as do Colorado farmers, because the bees will take along with them on the return journey 3 or 4 tons of honey.

Chase, despite his painful role as landing field for the buzzers, is proud of them. "They're specialists," he says. "The 1000 acres they're working on is the largest buffalo alfalfa seed field in the United States."

The agronomy department of the University of Colorado agrees with him, and adds that the California bees, for some undetermined reason, bring something with them that gives the alfalfa a big lift.

The mechanical end of pollination—as handled by the bees—is a simple affair.

They visit thousands of alfalfa blooms in the course of a day, seeking nectar from which to make honey. The truth is the bees don't give a hang what happens to the pollen one day or another. But they get the stuff on their feet and carry it from flower to flower.

In this way a bloom's pollen is intermingled with that of countless others and cross-pollination is the result. This is more conducive to seed production than in the case where self-pollination occurs.

So the bees, despite their ugly dispositions, are doing a thorough and delicate job and their owner, George Biggers, who came along with Chase in the truck, is understandably fond of them.

Three or four tons of honey—converted into money—provides one with a kindly outlook.

And as for Chase?

He says that salt water, of which there is plenty off the West Coast, "is good, really very good, for bee stings."

Bankers to Hear Housing Officials On Credit Curbs

TOP Government housing officials are scheduled to address the thirty-seventh annual convention of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America in Detroit September 27-29.

They include Raymond M. Foley, Housing and Home Finance Agency administrator; Franklin D. Richards, Federal Housing Administration Commissioner Franklin D. Richards; and T. D. King, director of the loan guaranty service of the Veterans Administration.

Their topics are expected to cover recently-made restrictions on housing and home financing, according to the association.

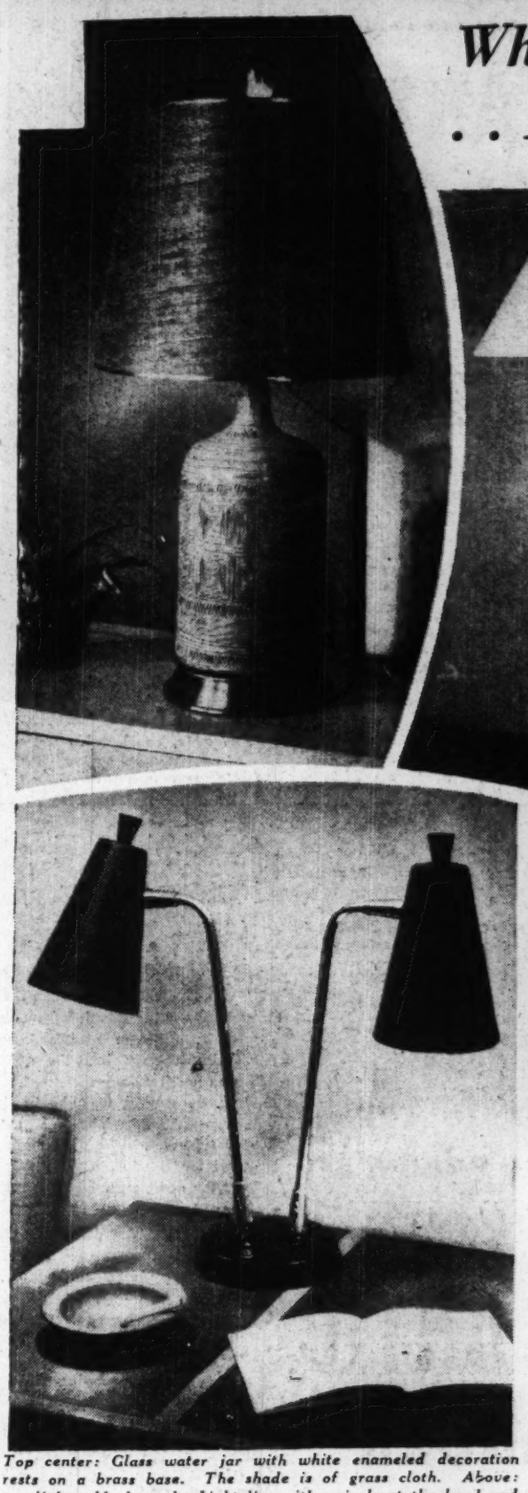
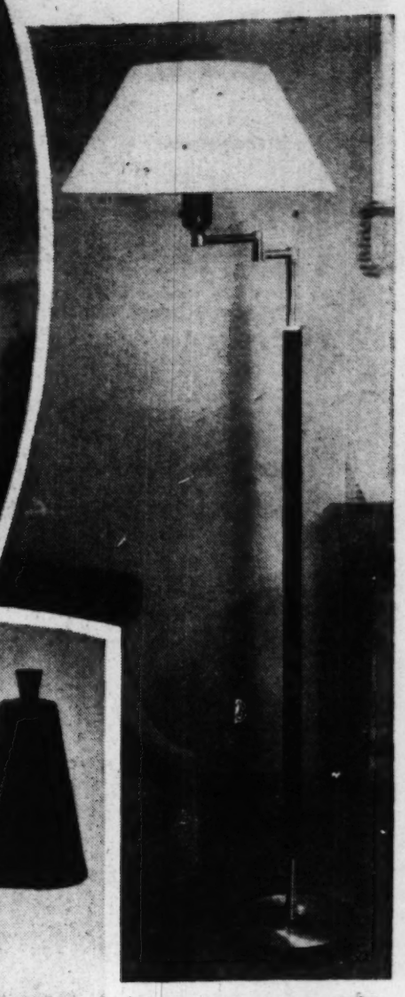
What's New . . In Lighting





Tailored floor model with swinging arm is equipped with three-way lighting effect. The shaft and fiberglas shade are being made in assorted colors

Top center: Glass water jar with white enameled decoration rests on a brass base. The shade is of grass cloth. Above: two-light table lamp by Lightolier with swivels at the head and base of arms. It comes in black, red, or a light green

THE ERA of the contortionist modern lamp is going out. The functional lamp today shows restraint in design. Sometimes color, alone, gives special emphasis to otherwise plain shafts. More eye appeal results from sculptural shapes. Slim metal bases may curve gently or rise straight from the floor to support a swinging arm. Brass, wood, ceramics and plastics are all found in lamps this season, such as the ones pictured here in an advance showing from New York

On Saving Space in Bathrooms

IF THE space in your bathroom is inadequate, the best thing to do—short of an expensive remodeling job—is to make the greatest possible use of the available area.

On the market today are special types of lavatories designed to save space in powder rooms and bathrooms. They're made of enameled cast iron or vitreous china, and constructed to take advantage of odd spaces.

The standard size of vitreous china corner lavatories, 17 by 17 inches, is made by most manufacturers. One company also makes it in a 12 by 12 inch size, while another offers an 18 by 18 inch lavatory as well as the standard size. All are wall-hung, needing no leg supports for strength.

Wall-hung standard corner lavatories of enameled cast iron measure 16 by 16 inches. Other sizes offered by one or more manufacturers are 11 by 11, 15 by 15 and 19 by 19 inches.

Space-saving shelf-back lavatories of vitreous china are offered by a number of manufacturers in sizes 18 by 15, 20 by 14 or 15, and 26 by 14 inches. Straight-front china lavatories with back are also popular in sizes 18 by 15, 18 by 18 and 19 by 15 inches.

Old Into New

Furniture Face-Lifting Is a Profitable Hobby

By Vivian Brown

Associated Press Newsfeatures Writer

Something old into something new can be the theme note of newlyweds with a small exchequer.

There is a wealth of old furniture to be found in shops and at auctions that can be bought, in some instances, for a pittance, and refinished to a Queen's taste.

No matter what furniture style you've set your heart on—period or contemporary — you can find it if you are willing to look. You will not collect it in one fell swoop as you might in the local department store, and it will not always be in perfect condition.

But if you and your husband want to make your home a hobby, seek out pieces one by one. You'll have fun selecting the furniture and refinishing it, if you aren't too anxious to furnish your home overnight.

Period pieces must be selected wisely to keep them in harmony. Many homes today combine the graceful curves of Louis XV or Victorian styles with the more rigid Early American and modern designs. You can mix and match to your heart's delight, providing fabrics are coordinated, woods do not clash drastically and furniture is balanced as to weight and height.

Woods, of course, must harmonize. Decide whether you want mahogany, walnut, maple or another wood. Then go out and shop. Walnut fruitwood, beechwood and sometimes rosewood can be used together beautifully. Maple and pine make a good combination.

IT IS good to start your refinishing experiments with a chest or other piece of furniture with large surfaces. Usually these show the result of your labors quickly—a good shot in the arm. If you want to do a very delicate job, you must be prepared to do about seven sandings and seven shellackings, applying rottenstone (a powder found in the local paint shop) after the last shellacking.

If the wood is heavily painted, an electric sander will help you get down to bare wood in a jiffy. This is an ideal method also if you are planning to paint new wood. These sanders are very light and easily handled by the lady of the house, who can do the large flat surfaces, leaving intricate knobs, spokes or friezes for the man of the house to finish off with fine sandpaper or razor-sharp glass.

Some people prefer pickled or blond woods or painted woods with Pennsylvania Dutch decorations. These should be sanded and for pickling a whitish grey paint applied and rubbed off quickly before it dries. There are pickle-paints available which will do the trick.

BLOND WOODS usually are bleached mahogany, and this effect is achieved by removing all paint and then applying oxalic acid, which should be handled only by careful persons.

If you just plan to paint unfinished wood or to paint directly over unsanded furniture, it is a good idea to use your sander after you have painted over the wood, then applying the second coat of paint for a smoother finish.

Antique glaze which can be found in your paint store can be painted over white furniture to give an antique finish. Or rub some burnt umber bought in small tubes and squeezed onto a cloth into the almost dry white paint. This gives that wonderful streaked unique Venetian look to furniture.

An old painted Boston rocker (1845) found recently for $7 proved to be a charming addition to a home. It had been painted and used as a lawn chair exposed to the elements by an unappreciative owner.

Refinishing it was a labor of joy. The seat, arms and back could be sanded with an electric sander, but spokes legs and rocker base had to be delicately sanded with broken glass. Each new stroke revealed the beauty of its true wood.

Now it rests in splendor once again at a fireplace. A good reproduction of this rocker would have been approximately $75.

This is the story behind our EXHIBIT HOME of 1950

Charming . . . but practical

110 QUINCY PLACE, SLEEPY HOLLOW, VA.

EXHIBITOR 7 HOMES of 50 FOR BETTER LIVING Sponsored by The Washington Post

- 10-foot wide Bedroom Closet
- Combination Garage-Recreation Room
- 1½ Baths, 3 Lavatories

SORRY! Children not admitted!
We love children but we have to be practical . . . Last year, considerable damages were made in our Exhibit. So this year, unruly children, by unanimous decision, decided that our Exhibit Home of 1950 will be open to adults only.

One year ago, The Washington Post selected a house we had built in West Falls Church, Va., as one of the Exhibit Homes of 1949. This house attracted more than 8,000 visitors. Many told us frankly what they liked and what they did not like in our house. From the many comments we were able to draw a pretty clear picture of what the average American family is looking for in a home. Of course, this Ideal Home probably will never be built. But our Exhibit Home of 1950 comes as close to it as we could make it.

It is an all-on-one-floor house—a "rambler," with plenty of closet and storage space—it has a place for the kids to play, a place for the husband to make a workshop, a large and practical kitchen with eating space, a separate laundry complete with laundry tray, washer and dryer, generous bathroom facilities, and a large living room for the whole family to gather happily around the television set. In addition, it has that indescribable, but all-important imponderable, called charm.

In our Exhibit Home of 1950, the "storage wall" of the master bedroom is almost 10 feet wide and 8-feet high. The garage is large—26-feet long, well-insulated and heated. It is accessible from the house through the kitchen. There, the laundry has been installed, the husband can have his workshop and the kids can play on cold or rainy days.

When you visit the house, you will also note the large kitchen, the pull-down stairway giving access to generous storage space in the attic, the built-in bookshelves in the large living room, the beautiful Higgins floor, the strategically located powder room, the large linen closet.

During recess Rollie, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Glen Hass, 800 S. Arlington Mill dr., danced with classmates and climbed the junglebars

When his mother arrived to take him home for lunch, Rollie was full of stories about his day's adventure.

Returning District Students Face Teacher Shortage, Overcrowding

By Elsie Carper
Post Reporter

DISTRICT children return to school Monday and again they will find part-time instruction, overcrowded classes and a shortage of teachers.

In the District, as elsewhere throughout the Nation, there still remains a backlog of unfilled school needs.

It is a condition that has existed since the war—an aftermath of deferred school construction, shifting populations and an increased birthrate.

The United States Office of Education estimates that this month 32,903,000 children and young people will enroll in school, an increase of 800,000 above last year's total. More than 26 million will attend public elementary and secondary schools. Twenty million alone will be in the elementary grades.

Locally, school officials anticipate enrollments will increase by 1500 with all of the new students going to the elementary schools.

96,571 Will Enroll

AN ESTIMATED 96,571 students will enroll here during the first six weeks. Last year's enrollment of 95,000 students was divided 52 percent white and 48 percent Negro. Population trends indicate that the number of Negro school children will steadily grow.

School officials last week announced that 1800 white children will be on part-time this year. All of these live in the fast-growing residential area east of the Anacostia River. At present there are enough seats for all Negro children.

The school board at its meeting Wednesday had to resort to expediencies to prevent placing other classes on part-time.

White elementary students will be attending classes in senior and junior high school buildings. Some Negro junior high students will be in elementary buildings converted to junior high school use.

All teaching posts have been filled in the District but about a fourth of the teachers in the white elementary schools again will be temporary. In general they will be well-qualified teachers. The District no longer will hire a teacher without a degree.

Teacher Funds Lacking

THE REAL shortage is in teaching positions. While the number of students will increase, funds will be lacking to hire additional teachers. This means larger classes.

Associate School Superintendent Carl Hansen estimates that classes will average 36 students. Since in sparsely populated sections of the city class sizes drop as low as 20, this means that some classes will have from 40 to 45 students.

Despite overcrowding and shortages, District schools will be in better shape when the school bell rings Monday than at any time since the war.

The accelerated building construction program of the past five years is beginning to catch up with the war babies.

The new Stanton Elementary School, a 23-classroom building at Naylor rd. and Alabama ave. se., will open for 900 students. Last year a third of these students were on half-day schedules.

By the end of the year school officials hope to end the doubling up. The new Simon Elementary School, 4th st. and Mississippi ave. se., is expected to be ready in December. It will house the students now on part-time at Patterson and Congress Heights Schools.

New Buildings Planned

SCHOOL officials say new buildings now on the planning boards will prevent future part-time classes providing the Board of Education gets the money to build them.

One of the most plaguing of school board problems in recent years—the shortage of buildings for the city's Negro high school youth—also is well on the way to solution.

Last spring the board transferred the Central High School building, 13th and Clifton sts. nw., for use by Negroes. Students from abandoned Cardozo will move in with the opening of school. A triple-shift program under which they studied at Cardoza last year will end.

In the northeast, construction is underway on the Spingarn High School at 24th st. and Benning rd. ne. The new school will house the growing number of Negro students in that section.

With some of its school building problems met the board is expected to turn its attention this year to the two teacher colleges.

Wilson Teachers College for white students, and Miner for Negro students, were described as "antiquated" and "inadequate" two years ago in the survey on schools prepared for Congress by Dr. George D. Strayer of Columbia University.

Dr. Walter E. Hager, president of Wilson Teachers College, recently submitted to board members a report calling for merger of the two colleges.

Dr. Hager said that one college instead of two would save the city money.

35 Recommendations

LISTED in the report were 35 recommendations made during the past nine years for improvement of Wilson.

School Bell Rings Early For Pages

THE FIRST back-to-the-books school bell will ring in the Washington area at 6:15 a.m. September 11—for a group of students who earn big dough while they learn.

Maybe 74 of these student breadwinners will show for opening bell. And maybe only 35 or 40 youngsters will be there the first day.

For the Capitol Page School, which works out in Library of Congress cubbyholes, opening day attendance depends upon such things as economic control bills, appropriation measures and what the Russians are up to.

If Congress is still in session on September 11, the school's full complement will go back to book learning here—49 House mes-

Takes Time as Well as Money

Virginia Moving Slowly In Overhauling System

VIRGINIANS—whose educational headaches are multitude—are learning it takes time as well as money to overhaul a school system.

Five months ago the General Assembly made available $30,000,000 in state grants for school construction, the first step to fulfill the campaign pledge of Governor John S. Battle for a two-year, $45,000,000 program to replace the little red school house with something more adequate.

But through August, only a little more than $2,400,000 of the funds had been certified to local school boards by the State Board of Education.

Why? Everybody wanted to make certain the boards didn't waste the money.

Before any State funds could be ladeled out, the localities had to submit a four-year building program, covering minimum immediate needs but also designed to integrate Battle-built classrooms into a long-range program.

A long-range view of the problem is necessary because Virginia's school enrollment—581,909 as of December 1, 1949—is expected to swell to 784,900 by 1960.

TO DATE, about half of the 127 local school subdivisions have submitted their programs. And these bear out the Governor's conclusion that the people are willing to spend much more of their own money than the State's.

The sum of all the four-year plans will probably come close to the $396,000,000 estimated as total needs by school superintendents in 1948.

The programs submitted also hint that more than one-half of the total funds spent will go for Negro schools, although the Negro school population is only one-fourth that of the white school population.

This is probably due to about half a dozen Federal Court actions to force school boards to equalize educational opportunities.

There is yet no final yardstick for figuring distribution of the 10 percent of the Battle money set aside to equalize school facilities in poorer areas.

Nor has there been word from a committee created to keep school building plans and specifications abreast of the times.

But the State Department of Education has already asked this committee to review architectural phases of the four-year plans now being submitted.

IN ADDITION to the Battle program funds, the 1950 General Assembly transferred $11,000,000 from the State Sinking Fund to the depleted Literary Fund, but local boards already applied for twice that amount.

105 Million Building Program

Maryland Enrollments Pass 343,000

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Sept. 9—Maryland opening its public schools to an all-time record number of pupils, has solved most of the educational problems of World War II, but a new war and a "tidal wave of children" leave the future uncertain.

The fighting in Korea and further predictable increases in school enrollment raise questions not answered by the 105 million dollar biulding program.

The war inevitably will mean the loss of teachers, after the State granted large salary increases to relieve a critical teacher shortage.

And "war babies" and post-war babies born since 1941 mean that the Sate's 121 new schools and 140 additions—completed or now under construction—will take care of only half the additional pupils educators estimate will be in school by 1957.

More than 343,000 Maryland children are trooping to school this year, an increase of more than 24,500 over the record 318,530 of 1949.

Baltimore city has an additional 2000 children in its elementary schools alone, creating immediate space and teacher problems.

NO ONE CAN PREDICT certainly what the present war will mean for public education, according to Dr. Thomas G. Pullen, jr., state superintendent of schools. But if it spreads, he said, the results will certainly be serious. Nearly 2500 male teachers, for example, are included in the coming school year's total of 12,125 in Maryland.

In Baltimore County "all but two or three" high-school principals are reserve officers, according to Dr. Pullen. Garrett County in western Maryland has 56 men on its teaching staff of 112.

Already, a few of the present teaching staff have been drafted or called up by the reserves, including a handful of women reservists.

Other problems are certain to rise if we become involved in a major war. In World War II, while the population increased, construction and repairs halted almost entirely. Another such period could mean the end, temporarily, of Maryland's school-construction problem.

The "tidal wave of children" entering the schools is by no means limited to Baltimore. Another 115,000 or more pupils will be added to the State rolls in the next seven years, according to Dr. Pullen's estimates.

For some 50,000 to 60,000 of the additional pupils, the 105 million dollars spent or being spent for schools and another 30 million dollars that has been authorized still will not provide the facilities State officials believe necessary.

However, Dr. Pullen is not worried on this score, if building restrictions don't interfere. "We have seven years time and can handle it," he said.

IN 1946, there weren't enough teachers and many on the payroll were not qualified. Maryland school buildings were run down and overcrowded, and educational standards in general had been "radically reduced." Lack of appropriations made it hard to obtain teachers, who were unhappy about salaries as low as $1500 to start.

In 1943 the turnover in the whole State system exceeded 25 percent. St. Mary's County in its worst year had a teacher replacement rate of more than 100 percent. With too few teachers, classes sometimes numbered 50 pupils.

Temporary teachers—many with less than college degrees—were accepted as substitutes for those who left for military duty or higher-paying jobs. Some Maryland children then according to Dr. Pullen, did not have a single qualified teacher from the first to the sixth grade.

One first grade had 17 different teachers in the same school year. A high school class had four teachers before the 1946 school year was three months old. Mathematics and science instructors, particularly, found they could make twice as much at many defense or Government jobs

Arlington's Small Fry in Majority

ARMED WITH $6,526,000 in school bonds, Arlington County's School Board expects to be almost "caught up" by midwinter on school buildings for its record load of 16,000 students this year.

But "we're treading water," says School Superintendent William Early, his eye on the hordes of county 1-to-5-year-olds. They now outnumber all the rest of Arlington's public-school population.

"This year we'll be in the best position we've been in 30 years," says Early. "But if we don't keep building this year, next September we'll be right back where we were a year ago." He points out that school enrollment is expected to reach 21,000 by 1953-4.

The present bond money will be exhausted this year by 75 elementary school classrooms, 33 junior high rooms and additions to both Washington-Lee and Hoffman-Boston senior highs.

With this in mind, the county's elected school board will ask voters to approve another school bond issue within the next eight months.

THE SCHOOL BOARD hasn't yet decided just how big the new bond issue should be. On the basis of unofficial estimates, however, it probably will range from six to nine million dollars, covering a two-to-three-year building program.

Actually, within the next six years Arlington voters may be asked to pay for a total 18-million-dollar school construction program.

That's the cost, estimated by the Arlington County Council of P-TAs, of the following needed new buildings:

Four new junior highs by 1955.

Two new senior highs by 1958.

At least 50 elementary classrooms for each of the next three years.

HERE'S WHAT has happened to present bond money. Costs include equipment, site and construction.

These buildings are finished:

Yorktown Elementary, 9 classrooms, $346,469.

Glencarlyn Elementary, 6 classrooms, $294,964.

Abingdon Elementary, 10 classrooms, $365,748.

Kate Waller Barrett Elementary addition, 6 classrooms, plus alterations to old building, $277,214.

Walter Reed Elementary addition, 8 classrooms, $433,844.

Peyton Randolph Elementary addition, 6 classrooms, $187,778.

Still under construction are:

Stratford Junior High, 33 classrooms, $1,676,099. Some rooms expected in November, whole building by February, 1951.

7 Parochial Schools Are A'Building

COMPLETION of the first of seven new parochial grade schools in the Archdiocese of Washington will be marked at 3:30 p. m. today when Archbishop Patrick A. O'Boyle of Washington will dedicate the new Mount Calvary School, 7500 Marlboro pike, Forestville, Md.

Five of the other schools are expected to be completed shortly, according to the Very Rev. Msgr. John S. Spence, director of education for the archdiocese, which includes the City of Washington and these five Maryland counties: Montgomery, Prince Georges, St. Mary's, Calvert and Charles.

The five are St. John's School, 10501 Georgia ave., Silver Spring, Md.; Our Lady of Sorrows School, Larch and New Hampshire aves., Takoma Park, Md.; St. Ambrose School, 63d ave., near Inwood st., Cheverly, Md.; St. Michael's School, at Ridge, Md.; and Holy Face School, at Great Mills, Md.

The seventh school, Assumption School in Congress Heights, D. C., is scheduled for completion early next year, Monsignor Spence said, although it will not accept its first classes until September, 1951. At that time the new Archbishop John Carroll High School, presently under construction at 4300 Harewood rd., ne., also should be completed,

WITH A RECORD enrollment of more than 26,000 students indicated, most local Catholic grade and high schools began their Fall terms on September 7. Their 1950-51 academic year was formally opened, however, on September 6 at the annual Teachers' Mass at St. Matthew's Cathedral. Archbishop O'Boyle celebrated this Mass to ask God's blessings on the new school year. The mass was attended by 1100 teaching sisters and brothers from the 56 parochial grade schools, 7 private grade schools, and 13 parochial and 15 private high schools in the archdiocese.

Most Catholic schools in the Archdiocese of Washington, having completed their registration and other necessary opening duties, will institute full sessions tomorrow. The remainder, including some of the new parochial schools not yet completed and a number of private high schools, will not open until later this month.

Three private high schools, St. Cecilia's Academy, Notre Dame Academy and the Priory School, will hold their first classes tomorrow while Holy Cross Academy will open on September 12, Immaculate Seminary on September 14, and Georgetown Visitation Convent, the oldest school in the Washington area, and the Country Day School of the Sacred Heart on September 20.

MONSIGNOR SPENCE emphasized that his preliminary estimate of a total enrollment of "more than 26,000" students in archdiocesan schools this fall was only a tentative one. No final enrollment figures will be available until October 5 when the annual conference of all supervisors and principals will be held at the Archdiocesan Office of Education, 1814 N st. nw., he explained.

About 50 new teachers, most of them sisters, have been added to the teaching staffs of various Catholic schools in the archdiocese for the present term. Their addition makes a grand total of more than 1200 priests, sisters, brothers and lay persons now teaching in archdiocesan institutions. Virtually all of these teachers are college graduates, and many have advanced degrees.

CATHOLIC University, Georgetown University, Dunbarton College, Trinity College, Georgetown Visitation Junior College and Immaculata Junior College will not start their fall terms until later this month, although several of them already have started work in a few departments. These six schools had 12,119 students registered last year. Their 1950-51 enrollment is expected to be about the same.

Building operations on the Archbishop John Carroll High School are proceeding according to schedule, Monsignor Spence declared. When completed next year, this high school, which will cost upwards of $1,500,000, will be one of the finest institutions of its kind in the United States.

THE SEVEN NEW parochial schools in the archdiocese also will be among the most efficient of their type, according to the monsignor. A feature of each, he said, will be a large auditorium.

Mount Calvary will be a complete eighth-grade school with eight classrooms, a health clinic, a principal's office and a kitchen. A lower hall, built under the auditorium seating 552 persons, will be used as a school cafeteria and for parish social gatherings. The Rev. Peter P. Rakowski, pastor of Mount Calvary Church, has estimated the total cost of the new school, and the convent being built with it, as nearly $400,000. The school will accommodate 420 students and will be staffed by the Sisters of Notre Dame.

The new St. John's School in Silver Spring is designed to accommodate about 500 students. Built at a cost of $210,000, it has 10 classrooms, a kindergarten and an auditorium seating 500. The Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary will teach in the new school. The Rev. Joseph T. Kennedy is pastor of St. John's Church.

Our Lady of Sorrows School in Takoma Park has eight classrooms and a kindergarten and will accommodate slightly more than 400 students. Its auditorium will seat 600. Only the first four grades will be started this fall by the Sisters of Divine Providence who will teach in the new school. The overall cost will be nearly $300,000, according to the estimate of the Rev. James E. King, pastor of Our Lady of Sorrows Church.

St. Ambrose School at Cheverly also has eight classrooms and expects to enroll about 300 students this fall in its $200,000 building. The new school, which has an auditorium seating 500 persons, will be staffed by the Benedictine Sisters. The Rev. Ronald J. Fannon is pastor of St. Ambrose Church.

The new $60,000 St. Michael's School at Ridge, Md. will replace the old school built in 1911, according to the Rev. Merle V. Baldwin, S. J., pastor of St. Michael's Church. There will be six classrooms, an office, library and combination auditorium and gymnasium in the new building. The Sisters of St. Joseph (Hartford, Conn.) who teach there have enrolled about 200 students.

Another school built as a replacement is the new Holy Face School at Great Mills, Md., which will cost about $80,000 and will accommodate 400 students. This new school will house eight classrooms, an auditorium seating nearly 500, a principal's office and a library. The Rev. Morgan A. Downey, S. J., is pastor of Holy Face Church, and the Sisters of St. Joseph (Hartford, Conn.) also teach there.

as teaching. Many stopped teaching.

AS THE FIRST SCHOOLS to open began classes last week 884 new faculty members had been hired since 1947, the State has increased its teacher total by more than 2000. The number of school children has gone up by 44,030 in a little more than the same time. The turnover rate of teachers last year had dropped to 14.1 percent.

BY NEXT YEAR, the long-sought goal of having a teacher for each 30 Maryland school children will be obtained—barring serious war developments. The present average is between 33 and 34.

The salary increases that took Maryland to a place in the top five States in the country have encouraged young men and women to prepare for teaching careers.

The State teachers colleges are "bursting at the seams," according to Dr. Pullen and $2,500,000 has been appropriated for new construction.

Enrollment in the teachers colleges has mounted from 540 in 1944 to about 2000 this year. The annual turnover of teachers in the lower grades is expected to exceed 600, he said, and the annual shortage should be filled by State teachers-college graduates.

Elementary school teacher positions in Maryland are all filled, but some of the teachers still are holdovers with substandard qualifications.

All high school posts are filled with fully qualified personnel.

DR. PULLEN explains the teacher situation this way:

"We can get more high school teachers than we need in most subjects. In the elementary field we have made tremendous progress and hope soon to make more progress. In both cases we have gone far beyond what we anticipated."

When Maryland gave teachers salary increases in 1947, the minimum rose from $1500 to $2200, with a further provision for a $100 annual increase. The maximum pay for regular teaching posts is $3800.

Dr. Pullen predicts there will be State aid for nursery schools and kindergartens in the foreseeable future.

A junior college for Negroes was opened this year at Rockville, Montgomery County, and the County has purchased the Bliss Electrical School to use the site and buildings for a new Montgomery County junior college.

The Academy expects to move some time this fall to new quarters now under construction at 16th st. and Fort Stevens dr. nw.

The Academy carries students from kindergarten through junior high school, and supplements the normal school program with studies of the Hebrew language, customs and history.

From Nursery Through High School

3 Cathedral Schools Expecting 800

AN ESTIMATED 800 students will enroll in the three Washington Cathedral schools during the week of September 18.

The schools—which form a center of Christian education from nursery through high school levels—are conducted under the auspices of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation of the District of Columbia, of which the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, Bishop of Washington, is president.

College preparatory and general courses for both resident and day students, grades four through twelve, are provided by the National Cathedral School for Girls and the St. Albans for Boys. Classes at the Boys School begin on September 20; at the Girls School, September 22.

Beauvoir, which has facilities for children from three to nine, will open September 20. All schools are located on the Cathedral grounds.

THE CATHEDRAL Girls School is starting on its second half-century under new leadership. Miss Katherine Lee, the new principal, succeeds Miss Mabel Turner, who retired recently. Miss Lee comes from California where for four years she was principal of the Polytechnic Elementary and Junior High School in Pasadena.

The Boys School will enter its forty-second year, with the Rev. Charles Martin in his second year as headmaster.

Among new faculty members of the Girls School will be Mrs. Mary Welles Stockmeyer, new head of the middle school (grades four through junior high school). Mrs. Stockmeyer, who with her late husband was co-founder and director of American Schools in Bogota, Colombia, and Puebla, Mexico, returned to this country a year ago and has been doing research work in sociology at the University of Chicago.

OTHER ADDITIONS to the Girls School faculty will be Miss Elfida Vasquez, Spanish teacher, and Mrs. Martha Neitzka, fourth grade teacher in the middle school. Miss Vasquez holds a B. A. degree from the University of Denver and has done graduate work at the University of Mexico and the University of Texas. Mrs. Neitzke formerly taught at St. Mary's Hall and at Friends' School in Baltimore.

Instructors newly appointed to the faculty of the St. Albans lower school include James R. Brainerd, graduate of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.; Winthrop W. Brown, graduate of Amherst College, Amherst, Mass., and also of Sidwell Friends School here, and Alan Lukens, graduate of Princeton University. Mr. Lukens formerly taught in Southern Arizona School, Tucson, Ariz.

Two seniors at the National Cathedral School for Girls, Willie Orme and Pat Smith, discuss plans for the new school year. They meet at a favorite rendezvous—Shadow House in the Bishop's Garden

Offer Music Courses

Long Island University, Brooklyn, will offer 40 courses in music this fall. Among new courses added by the music department are some in recreational music, music in therapy, music in industry, piano tuning and operatic music. The 125-piece symphonic band, the orchestra and the chorus will be open to freshmen.

Pages-Are-Early-Birds

sengers, 21 Senate handymen and 4 from the Supreme Court.

Should Congress close shop before that day, about half the blue-clad boys will go to their home towns and local schools until the legislators reconvene.

But marathon sessions mean fatter bank accounts for the Capitol page boy. His take home pay while on the job today is $225 a month.

But School Superintendent Orson W. Trueworthy—a native Washingtonian—stoutly defends the seemingly soft touch of good schooling, good pay and work with men of influence all rolled into one package.

SINCE THE OFFICIAL duties of a page call for getting the House and Senate chambers in shape before noon meeting time, the boys attend school from 6:15 a.m. to 9:39 a.m.

While Congress is meeting, pages are busy as legmen for the legislators. In the chambers, several take posts near the House Speaker's and Senate President's chairs, ready to run bills, messages and amendments from individual members to the desk.

Page boys stop running, and they almost stop walking, too, when Congress quits for the day, which normally is about 5:30 p.m.

Each page takes four major subjects each of his four high school years—English, history, science or mathematics and a foreign language.

TO THOSE who think three hours a day in the classroom is insufficient, Trueworthy points to the school's college entrance records. About three-quarters of recent graduating classes have entered colleges, have done well and have usually saved enough in Page School to pay their way.

What tickles Trueworthy most about his 14 to 19-year-old charges is their political savvy. All are selected for page jobs either under an individual member's patronage or under general patronage.

"These kids are operators," says Trueworthy. "Why, when I came to the school in 1947, most of the boys were under Republican auspices. Today many of the same youngsters are here, and you never saw a better bunch of loyal Democrats. They're sweet promoters."

Virginia's Got the Money But She's Not Spending It

Virginia's No. 1 educational headache but there are others, such as teachers' salaries, the biggest item after construction. The 1950 General Assembly provided a new two-year fund of $3,250,000 to aid the localities in teachers' pay.

This is in line with another promise of Governor Battle—a $2000 minimum salary for properly certificated teachers. In 1948-49, the average salary for all school personnel, including principals and supervisors, was only $2215.

This new fund is designed also to reduce the number of uncertificated teachers. Of 21,573 teachers in the last school year, about 3000 were uncertificated.

But just a few weeks ago, Dowell J. Howard, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, had to remind local school boards of this aim.

Howard disclosed that one of the State's teacher colleges had 39 graduates seeking jobs. Yet, he said, one county alone was asking the department for 54 permits and 75 emergency certificates which permit high school graduates to teach.

Even so, elementary teachers are a critical item. Only 397 were graduated from State colleges last spring and it is estimated that 4162 new ones are needed.

Because of this, 90 to 95 percent of the uncertified teachers teach the elementary grades. They numbered 2783 last year.

VIRGINIA'S PARENTS and teachers are not the only ones with headaches. The State Department of Education, target of many free swings lately, has its share, too.

For example, veteran teachers have written newspapers complaining of the department's "progressive' ideas. They have denounced the "coddling" of students and what they claim is a policy of passing a flat percentage of students regardless of marks.

In answer to this, Howard has declared the opposite is true, that too few students are passing.

Of 100,000 first graders in 1937-38, he said, only 24,000, or 24 percent, reached the eleventh grade in 1948-49.

The department also got its orders from the General Assembly which laid down a number of required subjects and called the department's attention to the Virginia Constitution and Bill of Rights.

THE ASSEMBLY was stirred when it learned that the only textbook on Virginia history now in use in State schools is for fourth graders. However, department officials told the legislators they have been working for almost two years on a new overall social studies program for high schools.

A legislative committee made some suggestions in the program which is now scheduled to come before the State Board of Education at its next meeting for a final polishing.

This curriculum controversy resulted in an unprecedented meeting of State educators and about 400 representatives from each of the 126 counties and cities in the State early in August.

Represented were the American Legion, the Virginia Manufacturers Association, the American Federation of Labor, the Virginia Council of Churches, chambers of commerce, women's clubs and parent-teacher associations.

There was general agreement that Virginia schools were not adequate in teaching reading, spelling and Virginia history and citizenship, and there were some concrete suggestions on how to cure these ills.

IN THE FACE of criticisms, State educators have pointed to these achievements:

This year, 83 of the State's 127 local school subdivisions will have replaced the 11-year school program with the 12-year course—seven more than last year.

The number of one-teacher schools has been halved in the past 10 years, although there are still 1068 of them—457 white and 611 Negro.

Teacher scholarships for summer study were doubled this year.

However, these same educators warn that the State is a long way from being where it should be education-wise, that, as a whole, Virginia students are below the national average in learning.

Suit Stymies Building Program

Quonset Huts, Firehouse Shelter Fairfax Students

FAIRFAX COUNTY school patrons rejoiced last May when county voters approved by a margin of better than 2-1 a $10,500,000 bond issue for critical school construction.

But the victory at the polls appeared to be a hollow one last Wednesday, as school bells rang to the tune of overcrowding, the threat of half-day sessions in some grades and no prospects for immediate relief.

Despite the urgency of a vast school building program to meet needs so apparent with the opening of the new term, school officials find their hands temporarily tied. The bond issue, planned to get the school system out of the rut in which it found itself early in the postwar period, is bogged down in legal entanglements.

A suit filed by two county residents who challenged the validity of the referendum on the bonds is about to be appealed to the Supreme Court of Virginia. If the appeal is carried through, sale of the bonds may be delayed by as much as four months, according to attorneys for the school board and the county.

Even if the suit had not been filed, school officials could have done little with the bond funds to avert overcrowding this year. But according to Supt. W. T. Woodson, the knowledge that something was being accomplished would have tempered the "intolerable" conditions now existing in many of the county schools.

IF APPELLANTS in the case take advantage of the maximum time limit allowed them to perfect their appeal, the bond sale will be delayed sufficiently to thwart well-laid plans to complete many new projects by the 1951 school term, Woodson said.

Even more disturbing, however, is the rising cost of building materials. Any substantial delay can well mean that the $10,500,000 bond fund will be entirely inadequate to finance projects which had been planned to meet "minimum" needs, the superintendent pointed out.

Haunted by the specter of even further overcrowding next year, school officials and supporters of the bond program are holding out these alternative hopes for an early solution:

1. That the Court of Appeals, if it grants the complainants the right to appeal, will require the appellants to post a prohibitive "injunction" bond—so high that they cannot afford to pursue the case.

2. That the complainants can be persuaded by civic-minded neighbors to withdraw their suit in their interest of the county's school children.

Regarding the latter, Woodson commented: "I can't believe these people are really aware of what they are doing to the county school children. They must be misinformed or ill-advised if they cannot recognize the difficult situation they are creating for the pupils."

WITH THE SUIT looming as a threat to next year's school plans, the picture at the start of the current term is glum. Final enrollment figures won't be known for several days, but it is a certainty that virtually all schools in the county will be carrying more than their normal load of pupils, according to Woodson. A tentative estimate of enrollment is 14,000—about 1000 more than was reported at the start of last year—but it may be swelled by late registrants.

Half-day sessions in many of the lower grades are "inevitable," Woodson said, but schedules won't be made up until the final enrollment figures are known. In many cases, pupils will be crammed into obsolete buildings.

To the limit of its financial ability and available accommodations, the school board has made some temporary provisions to take care of the increased load. Classrooms have been set up in converted apartments at the Belle View, Willston and Shirley-Duke developments; 11 Quonset huts have been installed to accommodate the overflow from some of the more heavily-congested schools and at Herndon, the school board has arranged to rent four rooms in a new firehouse under construction by the Herndon Volunteer Fire Department.

WOODSON frankly admits these facilities aren't sufficient in the face of increased enrollment and the fact that the schools would have been overloaded even without them.

The only ray of hope, he concedes, would be that which might spring from a solution to the bond dispute in time to begin a building program which would avert a repetition of the dilemma next year.

Green Acres Enters 17th Year Sept. 25

Green Acres School, 1275 Rockville pike, Bethesda, Md., begins its seventeenth year September 25.

Miss Ann Martin, a teacher at the school since 1946, has been named director. She will be assisted by Mrs. Eleanor Phillips.

Miss Martin has done graduate work at Merrill Palmer School, George Washington University and the Washington School of Psychiatry. She has taught in day care centers in Denver and at Mississippi State College. During World War II she supervised child care centers in war industry areas in the Northwest. At Green Acres, she was acting director during the summer of 1949 and directed the Green Acres Summer Camp for three years.

Mrs. Phillips, a graduate of Vassar College, taught in New Haven, Washington and at Vassar before joining Green Acres two years ago.

2 Buildings In Sight for Falls Church

FALLS CHURCH'S independent school board, which won separate status from Fairfax County only 15 months ago, is making some king-sized changes in the city's school system.

Most important among them, are two new school buildings, construction of which is scheduled to begin this winter.

With $700,000 in school bonds, approved last November by city voters, the school board will build a 120-pupil primary school and a 325-pupil combined junior-senior high school.

Bids for the primary school, on an 8-acre tract at Oak and Woodland sts., will be received September 15, according to School Superintendent Irvin Schmitt. The building should be ready by February, he estimates.

Final plans for the high school, on a 25-acre plot at Haycock rd. and Leesburg Pike, in Fairfax, are expected this month. The building won't be ready until September, 1952, according to plans.

ALSO INCLUDED in the bond issue was $50,000 worth of remodeling and improvements for the city's only present school building — the Madison-Jefferson School. New floors, rewiring and new lighting fixtures throughout, new doors to comply with fire regulations, and a complete inside repainting job will greet pupils when school starts Monday (September 11).

Actually, only about 300 of the city's 685 elementary school youngsters attend the city-operated school. Remainder of the elementary youngsters, and all of about 300 city high school students, go to the Fairfax County-run schools within the city's limits. About 600 Fairfax elementary children, in turn, attend Madison.

This confusing situation stems from a legal battle the city lost to Fairfax, after winning the right to operate its own school system.

The court alloted Madison-Jefferson to the city, but ruled the county was entitled to retain possession of the newly built Oak st. Elementary and Falls Church High Schools, both located inside the city.

It's possible the current "trading" arrangement by which each jurisdiction sends some youngsters to the other's schools, will be continued after the new city schools are finished, according to school board chairman, Mrs. Mark Regan. It would allow students to attend schools nearest their homes, regardless of who runs them.

A big "if" in the school board's plans is the city's proposal to annex 10.75 square miles of adjacent Fairfax land.

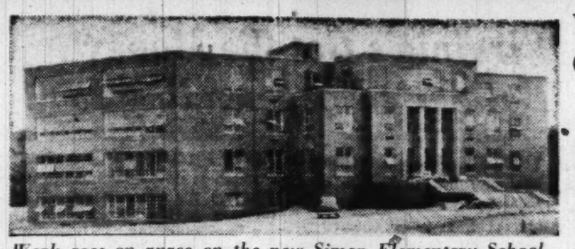
DEFEATED RECENTLY in Fairfax Circuit Court, Falls Church has asked permission to appeal the annexation case. If it should win on appeal, Falls Church expects to build three additional elementary schools in the annexable area.

Besides formulating its still-on-paper building plans, the city school board has upped teachers' salaries an average $300 this year. Pay scales used to coincide with Fairfax County's $1900 starting salary for nondegree teachers, $2100 beginners' rate for teachers with B. A.'s.

Also, newly employed at Madison-Jefferson School this year are: a part-time psychologist, Albert Young; a full-time art teacher, Mrs. June B. Johnson; a full-time music teacher, Mrs. Virginia Hooley; a full-time physical education teacher, Kenneth L. Layer; a full-time librarian, Miss Carrol Kennette.

There'll be more pre-primary work, too, for children entering first grade.

The increased pre-primary program, as in Arlington, is in line with a new policy adopted in both jurisdictions, of admitting some youngsters under six to school, if they pass certain psychological maturity tests.



Work goes on apace on the new Simon Elementary School, 4th st. and Mississippi ave. se. The building, expected to be ready for occupancy in December, will relieve overcrowded schools in the area beyond the Anacostia River

St. Patrick's Year Starts Tomorrow

A NEWLY RECONDITIONED St. Patrick's Academy, 924 G st., nw., opens for the fall term with a full day session tomorrow.

The Holy Sacrifice of the Mass will be celebrated the following day by the Right Rev. Msgr. James E. Cownig to mark the school's formal opening.

All classrooms have been repainted. Glass sections have been installed in doors.

Under the direction of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, the Academy offers a full four-year high school course with emphasis on a business education.

New members of the faculty include Sister M. Dorothy Anne, and Sister M. Augustin. Sister M. Presentina is principal of the Academy.

Writing School Opens Oct. 1

Lewis Lofton Moneyway, director of the Moneyway Studios of Short-Story Writing, who is now in Asheville, N. C., conducting a writers' workshop, will return to Washington in time to register students on September 16 for the fall term, which opens on October 1.

Before leaving for Asheville, Moneyway said an intensive four-months' course in the technique of the short story will be given in the late afternoons, beginning October 2.

The writers' group, which meets in the studios at 912 19th st. nw. each Wednesday evening for discussion and criticism, will hold its first session October 4.

Accommodate Half of Increase

4 New Prince Georges Schools Aren't Enough

AMONG schools to be opened in Prince Georges this year is one at Andrews Air Force Base operated jointly by authorities at the base and the county board of education.

Other schools opening their doors for the first time Monday (September 11) are the 22-room Fairmont Heights Negro Junior-Senior High School, the 12-room Thomas S. Stone Elementary School in Mount Rainier and the 10-room Langley Park Elementary School.

Fourteen other new schools or additions, making up the county's current $8,000,000 construction program, are either under way or will be started before the end of the year.

Even though the outlook is much better this year than last, much more construction is needed. Superintendent of Schools G. Gardner Shugart said.

"What we are doing is not sufficient," he said. "We are not keeping pace with home construction."

SHUGART estimated that the additional rooms available at the beginning of the term will accommodate about one-half of the pupil increase.

"We will have from 3000 to 3500 pupils on double shifts at the beginning of the term," he said, "with the number lessening as projects under construction are completed during the school year."

Shugart listed five schools in areas which are being rapidly built up as certain to have double shifts. These are Wildercroft, Cheverly, Ager Road, J. Enos Ray and Riverdale elementary schools.

TO MEET present needs, Shugart estimated a 10-million-dollar construction program would be required. An additional 15 million dollars would be needed within the next five years. The board of education has the necessary funds authorized to finance the former program, Shugart said. All that is needed is for the County Commissioners to approve issuance of bonds.

The addition of the four new schools, together with the closing of seven small elementary schools for consolidation purposes, actually reduces the number of schools in the county from 98 to 95.

However, 90 teaching positions will be added, bringing the total teaching staff to 1050.

Shugart anticipates a school enrollment of about 31,500 this year, compared with 28,500 last year and 16,900 10 years ago.

THE PHYSICAL facilities of the school at Andrews Air Force Base, unique in the county, are being supplied by the base, with the county providing teachers and instructional material.

Located in the officers' quarters section of the base, the school will occupy the ground floors of two two-story structures at first. If needed, the second floors also can be utilized.

Lieut. H. C. Godbee, information and education officer at the base, said about 130 pupils will attend the school, which will contain only the first four grades. About 20 upper grade pupils will continue to attend the Forestville Elementary School near the base, he said.

Construction of new quarters on the base this spring practically doubled the number of school children, Godbee said, and would have placed a burden on the Forestville School.

AS A RESULT, Col. Robert A. Gardner, base commanding officer, suggested this plan to the county board of education as a solution.

Although desks and some other equipment have not yet arrived, Godbee said the school would be ready on opening day.

Of the 14 other projects in the current program, 11 are now under construction. One is scheduled for opening this fall, three in January, two next spring and five by next fall.

The other three will go under construction during the current year, according to present plans, Shugart said.

Barbara Narles, June graduate of the National Academy of Broadcasting, 3338 16th st. nw., is the new director of Women's and Children's Programs for WJJJ, Montgomery, Ala. While attending the academy Miss Narles was a resident of Arlington, Va.

District Needs More Teachers

"Probably it is not surprising that no action has been taken with reference to most of them," Dr. Hager said.

"The cost might have been too great, especially because all expansion and improvements in one college must be duplicated in another.

"The proposed merger of the two colleges should enable the Board of Education to build an institution vastly stronger than either of the present colleges can hope to be."

The board also is expected to seek a new administration building. The present structure, the 75-year-old Franklin School, 13th and K sts. nw., is in need of repairs and no longer can house all of the school offices. School officials are scattered throughout the city in 30 other school buildings.

Alexandria Pupil Load Moderate

IN AN ERA of overcrowding, half-day sessions and temporary classrooms, Alexandria pupils can well be grateful to a progressive school administration which first foresaw the current emergency as far back as 15 years ago.

The more than 8000 children who reported to the city's 13 schools Wednesday September 6 found none of the conditions that have plagued school officials in several other Greater Washington communities, where "temporary expedients" have been devised to meet the problem of overcrowding.

Due to a constant program of building with an eye to the future, Alexandria schools not only have kept pace with, but have remained ahead on the problem of a growing school population, according to T. C. Williams, superintendent of city schools.

Pupils are attending full-day sessions in permanent classrooms, and the pupil load at the start of the current session ranges from 25 to 29 a teacher, William said. This is well below the "desired" maximum pupil load of 30 per teacher.

FURTHERMORE, the pupils are housed either in new buildings or older structures which have been kept in a constant state of repair and have been fully renovated in recent months. Every one of the schools in the city is equipped with a modern cafeteria.

This happy picture, Williams said, stems from a combination of an alert school board and a city council that has cooperated "to the fullest extent" with every request from school officials. Since the mid-thirties, he pointed out, both the board and the council made their plans in terms of future needs instead of demands placed upon them at the time the plans were under study.

As an example, he pointed to the modern George Washington High School, erected in 1935. Although the high school population was 700, the new school was designed for 1000 pupils because school officials knew the city was booming.

THE SAME POLICY has been followed in both the construction of new schools and additions to existing buildings, Williams said. As a result, there are still "a few" vacant classrooms this year despite the city's phenomenal wartime and postwar growth.

Personnel of both the school board and the city council has changed, to some extent, since the building program started to accelerate 15 years ago. But despite the changes, according to Williams, their activites have been marked by a constant spirit of coordination and foresight.

In the last two years alone, $2,887,500 has been spent for school construction to meet growing needs.

NEW FACILITIES in use for the first time this session are the new Parker-Gray Negro High School, built at a cost of nearly $900,000, and a 14-room-and-auditorium addition to the Mount Vernon Elementary School, costing $340,000. Both represent the latest in modern school planning, Williams said.

The Parker-Gray Negro High School is a particular source of pride to school officials and is rated as one of the best in the State, according to Williams. Besides modern shops and laboratories for vocational arts courses, it has a fully-equipped housekeeping apartment in which home economics students can learn their art by practical application.

As a further indication that the school board is still looking to the future, the new high school has a capacity of 450 students despite the fact that the city's Negro high school enrollment is only about 350.

Montgomery Will Handle 5320 More

MONTGOMERY County seems to be reversing a common postwar school trend.

While most areas scramble to find classroom space for an unprecedented parade of pupils, Montgomery—which had more than its share of postwar expansion—will shortly be ahead of the game.

Here is the picture: When Montgomery County schools open Monday (September 11), there will be 108 more classrooms than there were last September.

If you figure 35 pupils to a classroom, that gives space' for 3780 more students.

But that isn't the whole story. By "late fall," probably in October, the Board of Education expects to have completed four new buildings and two additions holding 44 more classrooms. That means room for still another 1540 students.

THIS WEEK, County School Superintendent Dr. Edwin W. Broome estimated enrollment September 11 will be 4000 higher than it was a year ago. But by late fall the school system will be able to handle 5320 more students than it did in the fall of 1949.

When the youngsters return September 11, they'll find waiting for them seven new school buildings with 58 classrooms, costing a total of $994,000.

They'll also find three new additions to older schools, with 14 more classrooms costing $503,000.

New schools all adhere to "the same general plan," Assistant School Superintendent Richard E. Carpenter pointed out. This has meant economical construction for the Board of Education—money was saved on architects' fees, and more was saved because several of the schools could be built in a lump by one contractor.

CARPENTER thinks the new buildings follow the latest and best in modern school design—cinder block construction, soft pastel inside colors, floor radiant heat, natural finish on inside cabinet work, asphalt tile floors.

But the new emphasis is on natural light, and lots of it. Where old-style classrooms were narrow and rectangular, so that light from windows could get to pupils on the corridor side, Montgomery's new classrooms are much wider and "nearly square."

New rooms beat the lighting problem by letting in natural light from two sides: from the window wall of glass block and clear glass, and from the corridor wall, which has a translucent glass block strip.

HERE is a breakdown of new schools to be ready when school opens:

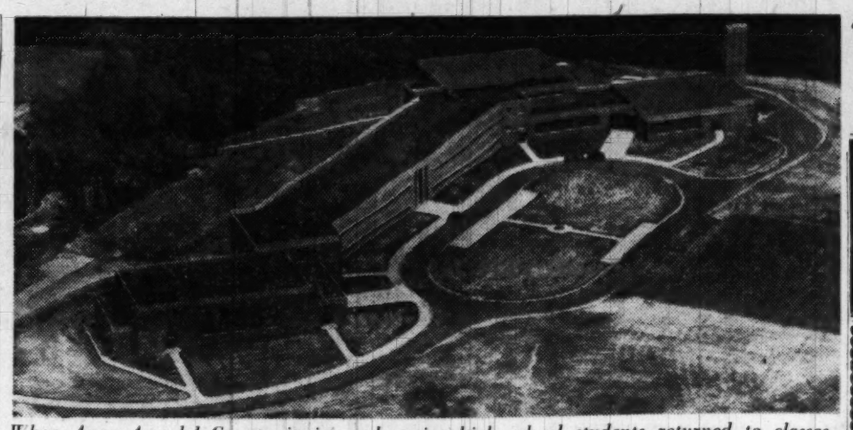
Viers Mill Elementary, Dahill and Joseph Mill rds., Viers Mill Village; 8 classrooms, cost, $134,000. Rock Creek Forest Elementary, Colston dr. and Grubb rd., Silver Spring; 8 classrooms, $135,000. East Rockville Elementary, Woodburn rd. and Grandin ave., Rockville; 8 classrooms, $138,000.

Oakland Terrace Elementary, Plyers Mill rd., Silver Spring; 8 classrooms, $134,000. Rolling Terrace Elementary, Barron, Bayfield and Hood sts., Takoma Park; 10 classrooms, $182,000. Highland Elementary School, Milton ave. and Claridge rd., Wheaton, Md.; 8 classrooms, $135,000. Glen Haven Elementary, Inwood and Chestnut Ridge rds., Silver Spring; 8 classrooms, $136,000.

These additions will be ready September 11: a shop building with 8 classrooms and 4 shop areas at Montgomery Blair High School to cost $295,000; 4 classrooms and a library at Poolesville Elementary to cost $88,000, and 2 classrooms and a cafeteria at Sherwood High School, $120,000.

Here are the four new schools expected to be ready by "late fall": Rolling Wood Elementary, Beach dr. just south of East-West hwy.; 7 classrooms, $160,000. McKenney Hills Elementary, Hayden dr. and Rosensteel ave., Silver Spring; 7 rooms, $182,000. Rockville Elementary (Negro), opposite Lincoln Park in Rockville; 10 classrooms, $220,000. Rockville High School (Negro), same location; 12 classrooms, library, cafeteria, $400,000.

THESE are the additions to be ready by "late fall": 6 class rooms, an all-purpose room, kitchen and library at Bradley Elementary, $195,000; two classrooms, all-purpose room and library at Somerset Elementary, $116,000.



When Anne Arundel County junior and senior high school students returned to classes last Friday, it was to this new $1,775,000 plant at Odenton, Md. The building is one of two new schools in the county. The other is the $475,000 Glen Dale Elementary School

Arlington Warily 'Treads Water'

Oakridge Elementary (new Hume School), 10 classrooms, $467,395, expected in November.

Hoffman-Boston Elementary, 6 classrooms, $192,487. Expected by December.

McKinley Elementary, 14 classrooms, about $625,000. Expected by January.

STILL ON PAPER are additions to the Washington-Lee and Hoffman-Boston high schools, including gyms, additional science and home economics classrooms and possibly swimming pools.

The current bond issue will also cover part of the cost of a $300,000 warehouse at 1426 N. Quincy st., near the Washington-Lee high school.

So far, the Board has released no definite plans on schools which a new bond issue would pay for. It has, however, purchased two future elementary school sites—10 acres on Little Falls rd. between Nottingham and Ohio sts., and 42 acres adjoining Four Mile Run playground.

When new elementary schools are finished in midwinter, the school board expects to eliminate half-day sessions for all elementary children for the first time in 30 years.

IN THE MEANTIME, however, 700 students of Nellie Custis and the uncompleted Oakridge school will attend part-time classes at Custis until some Oakridge classrooms are ready in October.

Two grades at Hoffman-Boston Elementary school will also be on part-time sessions until their new building is completed.

At Washington-Lee, 2200 senior high students will be on emergency part-time days (four instead of six hours), along with 1000 junior high students scheduled to go to the uncompleted Stratford Junior High by mid-November.

Nearly 50 temporary classrooms, in churches, basements and partitioned multi-purpose rooms, will have to remain in use this year.

Nineteen shiny new school buses have been bought for about $65,000.

Ninety new teachers have been added to the payroll, boosting the grand total to about 590.

Newly inaugurated this year is the "ungraded primary," which eliminates strict grade promotions in the first three years of school, allowing youngsters to complete work up to the fourth grade at their own pace.

THIS FALL will see the beginning of a central kitchen for Arlington elementary schools. Established at the Yorktown school, it will serve Clay, Lee and Marshall schools by October.

The school board has also eliminated all teaching principals this year, thus freeing these officials for supervisory duties.

The guidance department has been expanded under direction of its new supervisor, Miss Kathryn Cook. So has the art department, under its supervisor, Miss Willie Mae Ivey.

ALSO ESTABLISHED this year, under Miss Florence Maitland as principal, is a special new school for emotionally and mentally handicapped children.

And last, but not least, pupils will find $88,685 worth of new teaching materials and supplies, including musical, art and physical education equipment, when they go back to school.

Night Schools Open Monday

CLASSES RESUME Monday for the District's over-age public school students.

Classes will be offered three nights a week, Monday, Wednesday and Thursday, from 6:30 to 10 p. m. at 15 public schools covering all sections of the city.

Last year more than 10,000 adults enrolled in the program.

Some of the students were in their teens, some in their sixties.

The classes are open tuition free to residents of the District. The out-of-town student pays $15.50 a semester. The student must buy his books and his supplies.

Not all of the classes are offered at night.

The Americanization School, 19th and California sts. nw., offers an extensive program during the day as well as in the evening to train the foreign born to speak and write English and prepare them for citizenship.

DAY COURSES in home economics for white students are held at Thomson School, 12th and L sts. nw. Night courses are given at McKinley, 2d and T sts. ne., and Roosevelt, 13th and Upshur sts. nw.

The housewife or business woman is taught to design, make or alter her dresses. Special attention is given to women with figures difficult to fit. There is a course in short cuts in clothing construction and one in millinery. Next semester a course will be offered in rug making.

In the Negro division, home economics courses are offered at the Margaret Murray Washington Vocational High School, 1st and O sts. nw., and in housing centers or churches—wherever there is a demand.

General academic and commercial subjects are offered for white students at Chamberlain, Potomac ave. and 14th st. se.; McKinley, 2d and T sts. ne., and Roosevelt, 13th and Upshur sts. nw. Shop and vocational courses are given at Chamberlain, at Bell, Hiatt pl. and Lamont st. nw., and at Bell Annex, 7th and O sts. nw.

Negro schools offering academic and commercial courses are Cardozo, 13th and Clifton sts. nw.; Randall Junior High School, 1st and I sts. sw.; elementary classes at Armstrong, 1st and O sts. nw.; Francis, 24th and N sts. nw.; Garnet Patterson, 10th and U sts. nw., and at Randall.

Vocational classes are given at Armstrong, at Morse, New Jersey ave. and R st. nw; Phelps, 24th st. and Benning rd. ne., and Washington, 1st and O sts. nw.

Additional information on schedules for the white schools may be had by calling STerling 6111, extension 382. The number for the Negro schools is COlumbia 2683.

Lutheran Schools In Area Expecting 325 Youngsters

MORE THAN 325 youngsters in the Washington area will attend three Luthern Church-sponsored schools this fall.

More than half will be enrolled in Trinity Lutheran School, 3705 Longfellow st., Hyattsville, which opens September 11.

Pastor Edwin E. Pieplow, of Trinity Lutheran Church, said his main problem is "how to take care of the great number of applicants.

"We have 190 students, from kindergarten to the eighth grade in our $250,000 plant," he said, "but we could double this number with little trouble."

As all local Lutheran schools, Trinity is fully accredited, and teaches the regular curriculum plus Bible lessons.

Next largest is the Immanuel Lutheran School, 109 Belleaire rd., Alexandria, which, as Trinity is six years old and teaches kindergarten through eighth grade.

Pastor Willner D. Mensing says he expects a final enrollment of around 104 students this year. The school opened September 6.

Almost 30 children are expected to attend the Good Shepherd Lutheran Day School, in the Parrish Hall, Braddock rd. and Luray ave., Alexandria, Pastor A. E. Gysan said. His two-year-old school has only first and second grades this year. It opened also on September 6.

TODAY IS DU MONT DAY

presenting television's finest...the new Du Monts for 1951

In Du Mont showrooms throughout the country, Du Mont television dealers are welcoming the people of their communities to a special showing of the new Du Mont television receivers.

Dr. Du Mont is recognized as "Mr. Television." His development of the cathode ray tube from a laboratory curiosity into the "heart of television" made electronic television practical.

You will want to see the new Du Monts, and find out what Du Mont has done to make television more real, more satisfying. You will want to discover the performance advantages of special new Du Mont electronic circuits that actually "lock" pictures in frame, filter out "false" signals that cause pictures to roll over or distort, automatically compensate for weak, fading or drifting signals from the station.

The first home television receivers were Du Monts ...back in 1939. And such is Du Mont's engineering excellence that many of these early Du Monts are still in use, giving fine service.

You will want to experience the exciting realism of Lifetone* pictures on Du Mont's big 17-inch Rectangular and 19-inch Life-Size picture tubes. Du Mont was first with these sizes and Du Mont developments in tube design provide many benefits in sharpness of picture focus, depth of picture values.

Du Mont is first in all phases of television. Du Mont has designed and built many telecasting stations, using Du Mont telecasting equipment. Du Mont operates its own television network—the Du Mont Network. Du Mont produces its own cathode ray tubes. All Du Mont's electronic know-how is reflected in the exceptional performance of Du Mont television receivers.

You must see the new Du Monts and know what has happened in the world of television.

The Turning Point

How hotelman Hilton started toward the top:

LIKE MANY ANOTHER veteran, Conrad Hilton came back from war and found he couldn't stay put.

Hilton had been running a bank in his home town of San Antonio, in New Mexico. But now, in 1919, his footloose mood didn't fit into small-town life.

One day, when the fidgets were worse than usual, Hilton took off for Albuquerque to see an old friend—a veteran oil man who was dying of a lung ailment.

Hilton and his friend talked. Suddenly, the old man sat up in bed.

"Connie," he said, "I'm not long for this world. The Lord will call me very soon.

"Let me advise you: get out of New Mexico. You're just treading water here. Get out while the getting is good. Make a new start."

Hilton asked: "Where will I go?"

"Texas. That's where the big money is."

"You mean oil?"

"I certainly do, Connie. Oil!"

On the Crest of the Boom

And so Conrad Hilton went to Cisco, Texas, a town which was then in the middle of a rip-roaring oil boom.

First, he tried to buy a small bank. Right in the middle of the deal, the price shot up. Hilton said "no dice," and bought a hotel instead.

That was the beginning. Hilton learned hotel operation the hard way. With Cisco bursting at the seams, hotel rooms were turned over three times a day. It was a rare night when Owner Hilton could sleep in his own bed!

Tough as it was, Hilton liked the business, kept buying other hotels. From 1919 on, he bought more than a score, climaxed his operations last year by buying New York's Waldorf-Astoria.

As head of a $100 million corporation, Hilton has been called "the Nation's No. 1 Host." The advice of a dying friend long ago helped him achieve that fame!

America's Family Doctor?

THE KEEN man in the picture above has come to be looked upon as a sort of family doctor for America. He is Bernard Baruch, 80, shown in a new portrait by a famous photographer, Yousuf Karsh.

In the last war, whenever "Doc" Baruch spoke, the nation listened. When war began in Korea, Congress called him to prescribe again for a once-strong America who had thrown away her strength. As everyone knows, he prescribed the same bitter remedy he had prescribed in two world wars: total mobilization. . . . Clinical question: how fast could Doctor Baruch's weak patient get strong again?

Navy's Lark streams aloft. No bird-brain, missile can "see" an approaching plane.

• TO PROTECT YOU and your home, Uncle Sam is finding ways to Smash atom bomb

. . . and he's coming up fast on the answer—a guided

WE'RE A TOUGH PEOPLE when we want to be. But some things give us the jitters. Right now, we're fretting about this: could the Russians (who alone besides ourselves have the atomic bomb), sneak one through by plane to devastate Washington, Chicago, New York or one of our other cities without our being able to stop them?

We can't just shrug off the possibility.

BUT THERE ARE SOUND REASONS FOR REAL OPTIMISM.

We're finding a revolutionary answer to the atom bomb threat. It's almost sure to take the form – eventually – of a long, slim, fire-eating missile that can seek out enemy atom raiders like a hound dog after a squirrel.

We don't have it yet – and it may be some time before we get it. But recently new facts emerged about a stubby-finned Navy "test vehicle" named the "Lark." Its amazing capabilities are a startling preview of what we may have in the future–and so far the Navy doesn't call the Lark a real guided missile!

Here's what the Lark is designed to do, day or night:

- Outclimb and catch the fastest bomber in existence, bar none.
- Turn faster than anything in the air.
- Respond instantly to electronic guidance signals.
- Track down a fast-flying target plane in spite of twists and turns.
- Carry plenty of explosives to make mincemeat of the enemy bomber–and impotent uranium dust out of any A-bomb aboard!
- Blow herself up if the target is shattered (by another missile?) before she arrives.

Is Pushbutton War Here?

IS THE LARK the first soldier of the pushbutton war, then? Sounds like it–but the Navy still says "no"! And, the Navy's missilemen add, you can't expect to see Larks rising in the fields right outside your city in the next week or two, or even for many months.

You may never see them. That's because the Lark works–but not perfectly. Like any new electronic device it must be tested and retested. That's what her makers, The Fairchild Engine and Aviation Corp., are doing now.

And just as many prototype designs of airplanes never reach production, the present Lark may never go beyond the "test vehicle" stage. Designers may take some of her best features, combine them with new ideas, and make an entirely new weapon – a chick far more powerful than its Lark mother.

There's an even more exciting reason why you may never see a Lark in action. Already the services have other ground-to-air "birds" which in some respects excel the Lark!

Which ones? They aren't saying. And when you ask about the "Loon," launched from submarines, or the Army's devasting "Loki," all you get is polite evasions. But behind the evasions lies real promise that we're on the verge of getting real results out of the hundreds of millions of dollars our government has poured into guided missile research. And more than that, we're getting the answer to that threat of a sneak bombing raid.

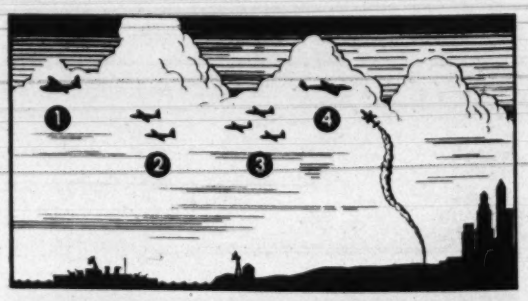
What an Atom Bomber Faces

HOW WOULD the Lark (or its brood) be used to protect our cities?

You can't get a complete answer from the Pentagon on this, either, partly because we don't yet have all the ships, planes and certainly the missiles that we hope to have.

But against the day when much-needed equipment is on hand, it's possible to tell from published sources how we'd defend ourselves against air attack. The pattern is this:

- Far off our coasts would range radar patrol planes like the Navy's new Martin Mercator. These, plus ships at sea, and radar monitors in remote land areas, would give first warning of approaching planes.
- All-weather fighters, flying at extreme



HERE'S WHAT enemy bomber would face: far-ranging pickets (1) which would give alarm; long-range fighters (2); massed jet interceptors (3). Finally, as plane nears target, it would face deadly missile (4).

BY WILLIAM S. FRIEDMAN

ranges, would meet and engage bombers far from our frontiers.

¶ For enemy aircraft that sneak through this hedge, there'll be waiting nearer our shores the full weight of U. S. jet interceptors. They'll comprise our heaviest defenses, and in normal circumstances should knock out all but a final, tough residue of enemy bombers. But what would then stand between these last survivors and their target—our cities?

¶ Conventional anti-aircraft, for one thing. But—eventually—the missiles now hatching.

At such a moment, with enemy bombers about to penetrate the defense perimeter of one of our great cities, control centers would alert guided missile launching bases.

An instant later, as planes entered the edge of the target area, crews would let go their missiles from launching tracks.

They would rise slowly at first, leaving behind a boiling trail of whitish smoke (see picture). Gaining altitude, they'd streak aloft.

The Lark Can See the Enemy

THE MISSILES we expect to have will be built with their own secret electronic "eye" with which to "see" the approaching enemy plane. More than this, they'll have a built-in "compulsion" to run down the enemy.

Such a missile would streak upward, altering its own course as the enemy shifted speed or bearing. With stubby wings fixed both vertically and horizontally, it could turn almost at right angles—instantaneously. In seconds it would "home" on the intruding bomber.

But why wait until the enemy reaches our cities before launching missiles?

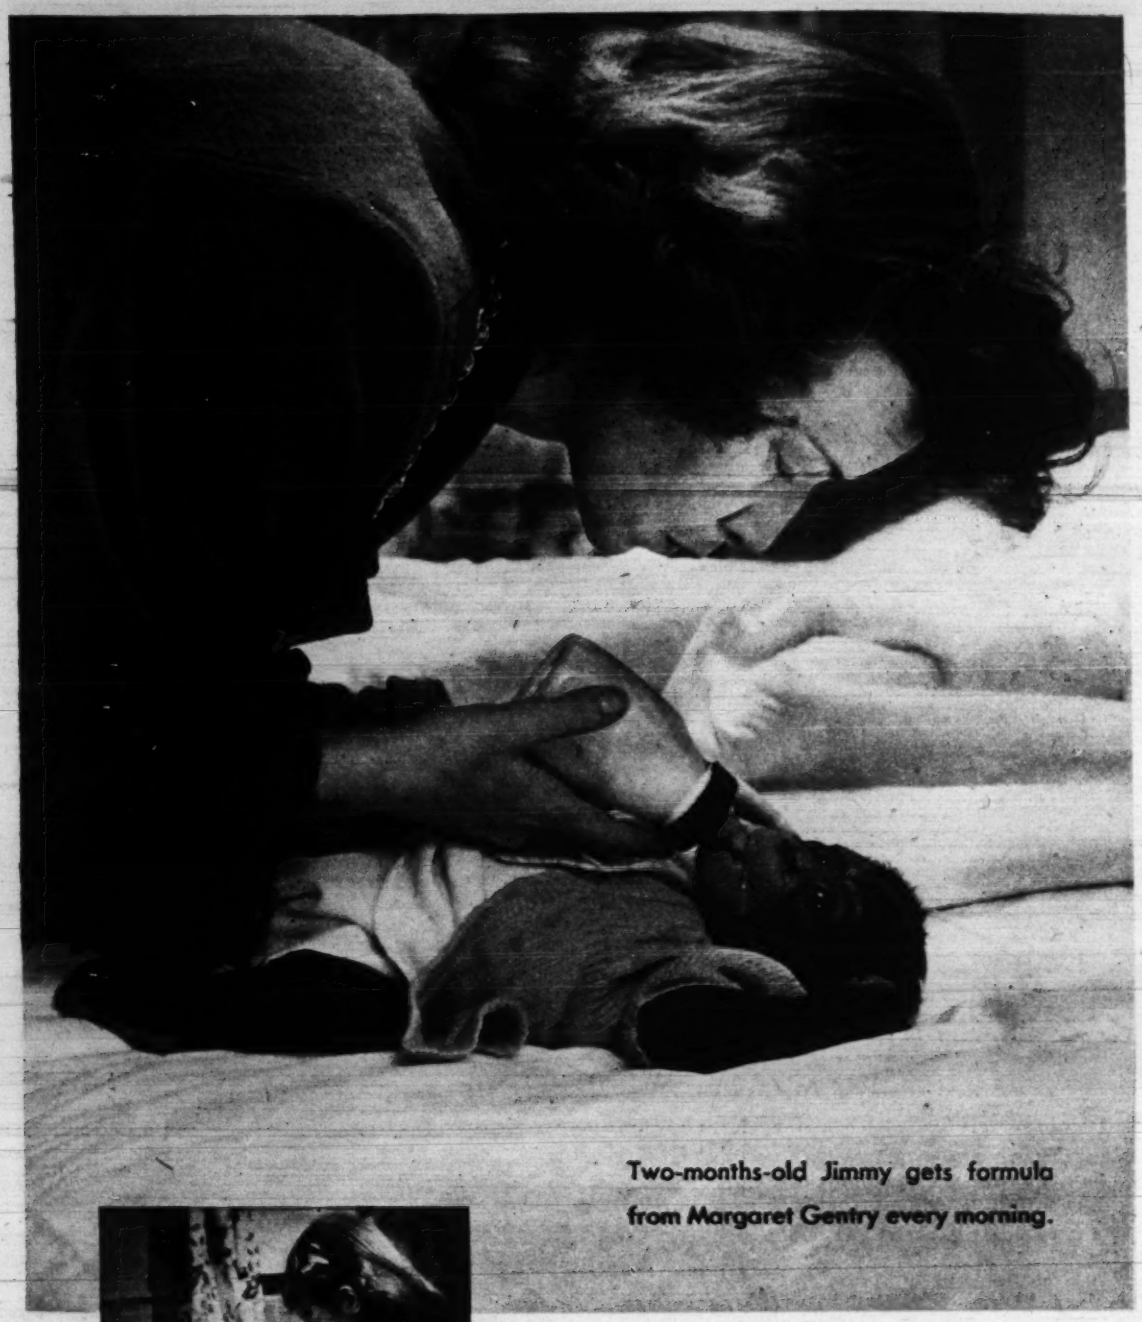
Chances are, we won't have to. But the Lark, for example, carries only a limited amount of the vicious mixture of aniline and red fuming nitric acid it uses as fuel. Changes would have to be made before a Lark-type missile could fight at long ranges.

There's another problem, too. An enemy might be able to jam the radar control we'd use. Electronic authorities, however, think they can prevent this. And such missiles couldn't be shot down in the air.

That's the story: We don't yet have the last word in guided missiles, and we may not have for a while. But we're on the right track — and moving fast. Let's hope we get them soon. And let's hope we never have to use them.

HOW THE LARK MIGHT LOOK TO ENEMY BOMBARDIER

LAST split-second before missile "homes" on enemy atom raider is reconstructed by artist James Cutter. Plane's bombardier recoils as missile streaks upward. An instant later, blast destroys him and his bomber.



Two-months-old Jimmy gets formula from Margaret Gentry every morning.

LIKE all kids, Danny has his chores. Here he helps Connie feed family ducks and chickens.

AT SUPPERTIME, Danny patiently waits while Margaret fills plate. His favorite, fried rabbit.

JIMMY'S big brother, Danny, 2 years, has face washed by Connie Gentry, 8.

AND Tony Gentry is patiently teaching Danny to write name on blackboard.

Want a... Baby Chimp?

They act just like kids!

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif.

WHEN YOU COME right down to it, there's really nothing like a chimpanzee to brighten up your home..

At least that's the way Tony and Margaret Gentry feel about it. And they ought to know. They have 36 chimps on their hands. Gentry, an animal experimenter for the Federal Government, also trains chimps for the movies.

Thirty-four chimps live in an air-conditioned building at the Gentrys' California ranch. But Danny (aged 2) and his little brother Jimmy (2 months) have an even better break. They live right in the family home where they're treated like kids.

Danny pops out of bed at about six in the morning and, like any kid, runs around the house yelling at the top of his lungs. This, of course, awakens his little brother, and Danny then watches – like any big brother – while Jimmy gets his bottle. After this, he sits down to breakfast with the Gentrys and their daughter Connie, 8. He polishes off his orange

SOULFUL Danny gives Jimmy affectionate good-night pat. Family cat usually sleeps with Jimmy.

Unlike many two-year-olds, Danny is already considered precocious enough to go to school. Gentry has been giving him piano and ukulele lessons.

From his cradle, little Jimmy often surveys Danny's furious activity. In a couple of months, he will be taught a few of Danny's tricks. But now, like any infant, he spends most of his time in the sack.

"I have three rules for bringing up chimps," says Gentry. "First I let the chimp gain confidence in me. Then, I study his likes and dislikes. Finally I let him know I'm the boss."

Maybe Danny will go into the movies some day. But right now the Gentrys are undecided. "We kind of like to keep him around the house," says Gentry. "He's got personality!"

CITIZEN-actor shakes menacing fist at jailed killer. Baby wonders what it's all about.

Here's what happens when . . .

Townsfolk help make a movie!

HERE'S how riot scene looks in film. Mob wields fire hose.

LIKE most U.S. movie-goers, those in Phoenix, Ariz., always wanted a chance to act.

When Producer Robert Stillman asked them to help film a mob scene for "Sound of Fury" (United Artists), 850 volunteered.

Housewives, mechanics, storekeepers, and students all stepped in front of the camera, although mob-scene acting comes hard to Americans.

But one "actor" said: "I got so mad I could of hung somebody!"

"GET the murderer!" howls a comely Phoenixan. Shouted herself hoarse.

A citizen shouts at murderers. Director's problem was to get his citizen-actors mad.

PRETTY GIRL rehearses yell, man shakes fist. But director ordered "more feeling."

CHEERFUL lady in sunfrock, kerchief, finds it hard to look dangerous in mob.

Unless your doctor says so, what you think is

ARE YOU ONE of the 25 million or more Americans who suffer from sinus trouble? Or rather, who think they do!

A recent check into medical reports, and talks with doctors at hospitals and clinics, reveal some startling facts on "sinus trouble."

At one great eastern hospital, one specialist said: "Ninety out of every hundred patients who come here with face and head pains announce that they have sinus trouble. How do they know? A bare handful will say a doctor told them. Most say they just know. Actually, at the very most, only 20 out of 100 have sinus trouble!"

One leading authority at a midwestern institution even reports: "Not one out of 50 people who come in with a self-diagnosis of sinusitis has the disease."

FUN! Yes, but overdoing it can start a cold, give you a false sinus scare.

Real sinus trouble, of course, is far from rare. The much-misunderstood sinuses are eight bony air pockets in the skull. There are four on each side of the nose, and just what their function is remains a medical mystery.

Cold Can Stir Up Sinusitis

BUT THE SINUSES are in direct communication with the nose, and so may be exposed to bacteria. Not infrequently, acute sinusitis—infection of one or more of the sinuses—follows a common cold. The germs may inflame the sinuses, too.

Depending upon which sinuses are involved, there may be tenderness in the cheek and pain around the upper jaw. Or there may be a severe headache, with the pain centered above the eye.

The pain usually begins in the morning, gets gradually worse during the day, then subsides in the evening. Or, instead of severe headaches, there may be pain at the bridge of the nose.

Usually, an acute sinus infection runs its course within 10 days. But if the infection happens to be unusually severe and isn't treated, it may hang on for a long time, becoming chronic sinusitis.

But chronic sinusitis isn't always heralded by headaches. The only sign may be an odorous pus discharge. Or just a feeling of exhaustion and nervousness.

What most people regard as signals of chronic sinusitis—headaches, face pains, nose obstruction—may be due to other causes altogether.

In rare cases, the fault may lie in a brain tumor, a pituitary gland disorder, or even glaucoma, the eye

By LAWRENCE GALTON

...out SINUS!

...is sinus trouble may not be sinus at all!

condition that's a major cause of blindness.

But more commonly sinus-like pains may be caused by neuralgia or migraine. Sometimes, even psychological factors–emotional upsets–rather than actual infection may be involved. A man may get "sinusitis" when things go wrong at the office; a woman, when family problems get the best of her.

At worst, self-diagnosis of sinusitis is dangerous because it may overlook a condition such as a brain tumor. At best, self-diagnosis leads to unnecessary suffering. Frequently, when the real trouble is tracked down, relief is quick and sure.

Two Old Sayings—Both Wrong!

WHY DO SO MANY people fool themselves about sinusitis? They do so mostly because they're afraid to see a nose specialists. And two familiar sayings explain their fear: "Once a sinus sufferer, always one." And: "One sinus operation leads to another."

Both are as wrong as they are widespread!

Many doctors frankly admit that in the past–especially 10 and 20 years ago–there was much ineffective and mistaken handling of sinusitis. Diagnosis wasn't always accurate, and some patients who didn't have sinusitis at all were treated for it.

To be on the safe side . . .

- Don't trust self-diagnosis—only 20 out of 100 are ever right about sinusitis.
- Don't be afraid to see a nose specialist. He knows the signs of real sinus trouble.
- If acute sinusitis hangs on for more than 10 days, be sure to see your doctor.
- Even if you've had chronic sinusitis for years, don't be discouraged. Doctors can help.

But today, doctors have learned to look for definite signs that indicate sinusitis.

Treatment, too, has vastly improved. Use of antibiotics such as penicillin and–lately–bacitracin, has proved effective in many cases.

Surgery may still be necessary. But one operation no longer leads to endless series of them.

But don't play with sinusitis–or with what you think is sinusitis! If you develop the acute form after an autumn cold, see your doctor. See him especially if the infection hangs on for more than ten days.

If you've had real chronic sinusitis for a long time, and even if it hasn't been helped by doctors in the past, see a good doctor now!

Chances are modern treatment may do the trick.

It wouldn't be autumn without rich purple Concord grapes, and half a dozen varieties of plums. It's time right now to make them into jellies and conserves.

Autumn fruits are here

By Beth Merriman, PARADE'S FOOD EDITOR

AMONG THE FIRST FRUITS of autumn, ours to enjoy only briefly, are the beautiful blue Concord grapes and handsome plums now on display at fruit markets everywhere. Serve them often and lavishly, for dessert, with crisp crackers and melting Camembert or crumbly blue cheese. But preserve some of them, too, so that you can enjoy their luscious flavor later on. If anyone you know has hoarded sugar, you might suggest its use in preserving before it gets too hard to use at all. There is plenty of sugar, you know, so use it.

Grape and Plum Jelly

3½ cups juice — 4½ cups sugar

1 box powdered fruit pectin

TO PREPARE THE JUICE: Stem about 1½ pounds fully ripe grapes; crush thoroughly. Crush thoroughly about 2 pounds fully ripe plums (do not peel or pit). Combine fruits. Add ¾ cup water; bring to a boil; simmer, covered, 10 minutes. Place in jelly cloth or bag; squeeze out juice. Measure 3½ cups into large saucepan.

TO MAKE THE JELLY: Measure sugar and set aside. Place saucepan holding juice over high heat. Add powdered fruit pectin; stir until mixture comes to a hard boil. At once stir in sugar. Bring to a full rolling boil; boil hard 1 minute, stirring. Remove from heat, skim, pour into glasses.

Concord Conserve

4 cups prepared fruit — 7 cups sugar

1 tbs. grated lemon rind — ½ pound seeded raisins

¼ cup lemon juice — 1 cup finely chopped nut meats

½ bottle fruit pectin

TO PREPARE THE FRUIT: Slip skins from about 3 pounds fully ripe Concord grapes. Bring pulp to a boil and simmer, covered, 5 minutes. Sieve to remove seeds. Chop or grind skins; add to pulp. Measure 4 cups into very large saucepan. Grate the rind from 2 medium-sized lemons. Measure 1 tablespoon into saucepan with grapes. Squeeze the juice from 2 lemons and add ¼ cup to fruit.

TO MAKE THE CONSERVE: Add sugar, raisins, and nut meats to fruit in saucepan and mix well. Place over high heat, bring to a full rolling boil; boil hard 1 minute, stirring constantly. Remove from heat; at once stir in bottled fruit pectin. Stir and skim by turns for 5 minutes to prevent floating fruit. Ladle quickly into glasses. Paraffin at once.

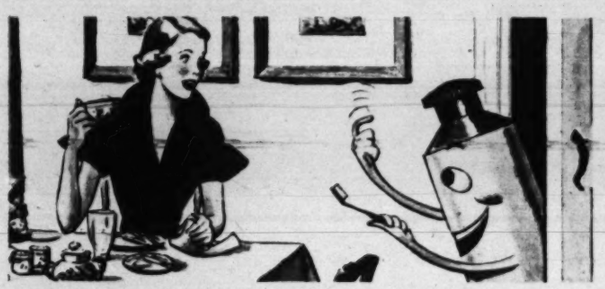
Can You Really Brush-Off Tooth Decay?

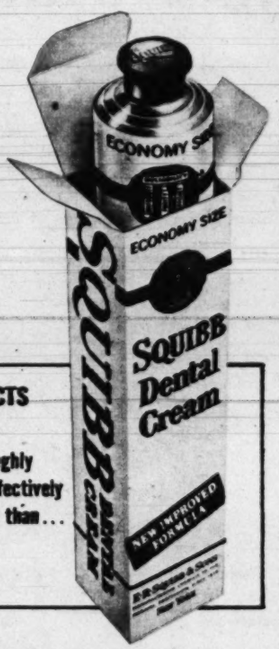
Is There a Miracle Dentifrice? Authorities warn against the notion that any dentifrice can prevent all or even most tooth decay. Dependence on a dentifrice, instead of your dentist can lead to serious trouble.

Many Things Cause Decay, say Dentists: faulty diet, especially in early childhood, infections or bodily defects, acid-forming bacteria, etc. A dentifrice can help combat only the bacteria-acid cause.



Brushing After Every Meal Helps, say Dentists. Bacteria in your mouth turn food particles into acid. This acid can cause decay. A good dentifrice helps clean away food particles —fights acid. Magnesium hydrate in Squibb Dental Cream helps combat mouth acids. Some dentifrices use ammoniated substances. Your dentist will tell you: there is no final proof that one is more effective than the other.

The Best Way to Fight Decay.
Remember... a good, reliable dentifrice cannot combat all the possible causes of tooth decay. A complete check-up and professional cleaning by your dentist every 6 months is still the best way to save yourself the worry, pain and expense of needless cavities or even extractions.



REMEMBER THESE 3 FACTS
no other dentifrice can—

1. Help clean your teeth more thoroughly
2. Combat acid and bacteria more effectively
3. Give you a cleaner, fresher breath than... reliable SQUIBB DENTAL CREAM

BUT CAN IT BE FOUND IN THE BIBLE?

People often indignantly demand that Catholics prove their teaching from the Bible.

The Bible is their "rule of faith"... and they argue that every man has the right and ability to discover for himself, by his interpretation of the Bible, what he must believe and do to be saved.

We do not question the sincerity of these people and we applaud all who strive earnestly to understand and observe the Scriptures. But—are they right in calling the Bible, privately interpreted, the sole source of Christian teaching?

"Hold the teachings that you have learned," wrote St. Paul, "whether by word or by letter of ours" (2 Thess. II:15). He refers to Christian teachings, some oral, some written... and demands that all be received.

Christianity did not begin with the Bible. It began with the coming of Christ. The Lord instructed His Apostles to "go forth... teach all nations"—and to insure that His truths would always be maintained, Christ established His Church,"... the pillar and mainstay of the truth" (1 Timothy III:15).

The last part of the Bible... written by St. John... was not completed until 60 years after the Crucifixion of Christ. There was no Bible in anything resembling its present form until nearly 400 years after Jesus had died on the Cross. And the widespread distribution of the Bible as we know it today was impossible until the invention of printing, some 1400 years after the Savior's death.

By what "rule of faith" did the millions of Christians live during those 1500 years?

The answer is, of course, that the teaching of the Church was the rule of faith for the Christian world. And St. Paul reminds us that Christianity consists of "one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism" (Eph. IV:5). "God is a God of peace, not of disorder," St. Paul said further (1 Cor. XIV:33).

Yet today we have nearly 300 different religious denominations in the United States, all calling themselves Christian... all professing the Bible as their rule of faith... and all differing to some extent or another in their understanding of what the Bible means. Could Christ have left a "rule of faith" that would permit such confusion? Would He have left the interpretation of His Word to the fallible and changing judgments of men—when our very souls depend on a correct understanding and observance of the things Christ has taught us?

FREE—Because this question is all important... because it certainly does matter what a man believes... we invite you to examine the rule of faith of the first Christians—a rule that is still maintained by the Catholic Church. Because the Bible is God's Word, and because He gave it to us for a purpose, we invite you to see what this purpose is. We have an interesting pamphlet on the correct use of the Bible, and we offer it for the inspection of all who are sincerely interested in following the teaching of Christianity as Christ revealed it. Clothes help get Jobs

BY R. MAGRUDER DOBIE

CAN CLOTHES make a good secretary better?

Secretarial schools today think they are proving this is true. And so, they are not only teaching girls how to be fast, accurate and efficient, but how to dress to suit the job.

Tomorrow's secretary learns, for example, that her silhouette is as important as her shorthand. The silhouette is the over-all impression a woman's figure, hair-do and clothes make during the first 30 seconds of an interview.

Grooming for the job is a key item in up-to-date secretarial school courses. School directors are so convinced that good grooming is important in placement work that they have hired full-time fashion and grooming experts.

One such expert is Betty Groff, a chic brunette who looks more like a model than a business school teacher. Through the Katherine Gibbs placement bureau in New York, Miss Groff keeps in touch with employers throughout the country.

"PLUMP GIRL"

LEFT: Tweed suit makes girl look heavier. Hat, hair-do stress round face. High-heeled shoes are wrong for her. RIGHT: dark, one-colored suit of thin fabric makes her look smaller. Lower, broader heels help, too. Purse is right for size. Hat, closer hair-do make face look narrower.

Miss Groff's job would be easy if she could simply tell students what to buy, without thinking of the cost.

But for secretaries with pocketbook trouble, Miss Groff offers the following wardrobe suggestions for fall and winter:

One winter coat, tailored suit and crepe dress in basic or neutral color; one wool dress in bright or pastel shade; one date dress; two hats, one in basic color; two pairs of shoes; two pairs of gloves; two purses; three blouses; two "gay" scarves.

For spring, Miss Groff suggests a smart print or dotted dress with dark background, a simple crepe dress in neutral or muted shade, another pair of shoes and two straw hats—one dark, the other light. For summer, you can add opera pumps and tailored cotton dresses.

DRESS expert Betty Groff (right) tells student that too-long jacket, flat heels are wrong.

How to Make Clothes Count

AND HERE are some hints on making the most of business clothes you buy:

- When in doubt as to what to wear, lean to the conservative. Before you tack a bunch of artificial strawberries on your bonnet, be sure your prospective boss isn't allergic to strawberries.
- As to jewelry, stick to pearls and simple gold and silver pieces. Remember: no jewelry is better than something cheap.
- Let your accessories add spice to your outfit, but avoid over-seasoning. Feature a hat, blouse and purse, for example, but don't wear more than two eye-catching items. They make you overdressed.

A hair-do is one of the toughest problems of secretarial primping. Choose the style that best sets off your facial contours. Here are some check-points:

- For a square face and prominent chin: long hair.
- Small chin: the shorter cuts.
- An unusually long face: bangs.
- An oval face (like Hedy Lamarr's or Lana Turner's): any style you please.

If you have an oval face, you're lucky. Almost any hat or hair-do will fit! How can you identify an oval face? If the distance between the top of your forehead and the eyebrow is the same as that from eyebrow to end of nose, and from nose to chin, you qualify vertically. And, horizontally, these distances should be approximately the same: 1) hairline at temple to the first eye; 2) width of the first eye; 3) space between eyes.

It's a Matter of Form!

Businessmen, of course, may scoff at the thought of a secretary standing before a mirror and taking accurate measurements of her face. They'll swear they don't care how she wears her hair and clothes, so long as she's neat and efficient, and doesn't pry into his personal affairs.

But experience proves that businessmen are wrong. Men will buy a certain kind of a car, a home or a boat because they like the shape it's in.

That goes for secretaries, too!

"SHORT GIRL"

LEFT: Two-toned suit with long jacket, plus wide hat and flat heels, cut girl's size. Long earrings are wrong. RIGHT: One-color suit has proper jacket length. Shoes with heels, "perky" hat add height. Button earrings are right for "petite" type. Ensemble is trim and attractive.

"TALL GIRL"

It's so EASY to keep colors NEW-looking with LINIT the PERFECT starch

Photographer decided a painter couldn't do justice to these legs, so he framed legs themselves.

Out on a Limb?

THE LOS ANGELES Chamber of Commerce went right out on a limb (or was it two limbs?) the other day and voted the objects in the frame above the world's most beautiful legs. Admirers of Marlene Dietrich and Betty Grable will feverishly dispute this. Quite an argument may come of it.

The framed pretties belong to Miss Gwen Caldwell, 21, of Santa Monica, Calif. She is a Hollywood model and a physical culture fan.

Just looking around . . .

A woman without a word to say . . . Operation Itch in Korea . . . and a communique on coat-tails . . .

JOYCE MATHEWS (ex-Mrs. Milton Berle, ex-Mrs. Milton Berle–she was married to him twice, wasn't she?) got into Teevee so she could learn to speak in the movies. So wha hoppen? She roams through the entire film, "Mr. Universe," without uttering a single word!!!

IN A TENSE three-way broadcast between Tokyo, Korea and New York, Major George Fielding Eliot, in N. Y., asked Mutual correspondent Walter Simmons in Korea: "Is there one final message you have for the American people?" "Yes," was the reply, "send us some flea powder!"

Herbert Hoover

STREET SCENE: Nick the Greek, who runs a modest luncheonette a meatball's throw from the Waldorf-Astoria, was snatching a whiff of the rarified Third Avenue ozone when a familiar figure strolled by. "Come quick," Nick shouted to his counterman. The latter, instinctively assuming it was somebody who owed the boss money, rushed out, clutched the passerby's coat-tails, then apologized profusely. The man he caught happened to be America's only living ex-president–Mr. Herbert Hoover!

THIS ONE, Frank Bonacchini reports, happened at his swank East Side Le Coq Rouge some nights ago. An elderly matron waddled in with her bored spouse and promptly began to bend his ear. Getting very little response, she snapped: "When I talk to you I want you to listen!" "I am listening," he sighed. "I yawned–didn't I?"

SHORT-SHORT STORY: One of our prominent industrialists is a member of Alcoholics Anonymous. He is so fanatical on the subject he's given a standing order to fire any employee found intoxicated on or off the job. When the latest such incident occurred, his general manager pleaded with him to reconsider his decision. "John will be hard to replace," he insisted. "Besides, he has a wife and two children to support." "Fire him anyway," was the firm retort, "and hire somebody with a wife and THREE children!" . . .

Only Real Mayonnaise

is good so many ways!

AMERICA'S FAVORITE MAYONNAISE! Delicious served plain, as shown in Chicken and Fruit Salad. Delectable, too, varied with milk, fruit juice, ketchup, French dressing. Real Mayonnaise never turns thin-tasting! Unlike ordinary salad dressing, it contains no starchy filler. No matter how you blend it, the sunny flavor and smooth texture always come through. It can't be beat—even by homemade mayonnaise.

EXTRA GOOD! Hellmann's Real Mayonnaise eliminates the time and effort of "cutting in" the shortening—and gives Biscuits a tender golden richness. In your favorite biscuit recipe, substitute ¼ c. Real Mayonnaise for the shortening—and taste the delicious difference!

CREAMY—AND QUICK! Real Mayonnaise is an important ingredient when you want a sauce to have "company coming" tastiness. Try Mayonnaise Cheese Sauce over lima beans: Blend ½ c. Real Mayonnaise, 4 tbsp. flour, 1 tsp. salt, 2 c. milk. When thickened add 1 tsp. grated onion and 6 tbsp. grated cheese. Cook over low heat about 10 min. (Serves 6-8.)

Artist Shirley Friend draws PARADE's cover girl, Kathleen

Studio for Small Fry

A Chicago artist paints the kids who will help keep America great

Moore. Doll was modeling lure.

An artist dedicates her talent to kids:

By Sid Ross

THE KIDS in the grubby streets of Chicago's teeming North Side have a special hangout.

It's not a clubhouse in a vacant lot. It's the studio of a friendly, youngish artist named–appropriately–Shirley Friend.

For years kids have been coming there – the tattered youngsters whose homes are mostly in tenement-type buildings. They come to eat apples and cookies, read comic books, talk about their troubles – and to sit (at 25¢ an hour) for their portraits. All kinds come – Irish, Negro, Bulgarian, Jewish, Puerto-Rican, English, Scandinavian, Czechs, Italians, even American Indians. They're all different and they're all Americans.

She Collects 'Just Kids'

By this time, the faces of a good many of them are part of a remarkable series of pastel paintings which Miss Friend, the wife of a prosperous Chicago department store owner, has been working on for over a decade. She calls it her "America's Children" series, and already the paintings have been shown in several U.S. galleries.

"I see these paintings as a means of getting children of different origins and walks of life to get to see and understand each other," she says. "To me, that's America!"

Shirley Friend throws impromptu party for neighborhood kids in her studio.

Bulgarian John Evanoff is proud to be an American.

Zita Baumgarten is one of tenement's Bohemians.

Violet Thunderhead is a pure-blooded Indian.

Marilyn and Billy Andersen are tow-head Swedes.
